The somewhat strange life of the Near East, with its oddity of custom and tradition, its color and clamor, etched in a setting of narrow, crooked streets which wind through the city, make a fascinating picture to the modern of the Western world. Here, too, natural sound is used, which in reproducing the voice of the street peddler, and the noise of the street, does much to add to the reality and effectiveness of the subject. A splendid number.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Sitting Pretty
Just Fair

The flagpole sitter is the theme of this comedy number, which had good possibilities, and numerous good gag lines, but was disastrously damaged by the too frequent and obnoxious use of the word "fanny." This fault only succeeds in making the short a crude comedy, hardly presentable before children.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The King's Armada
(Fox)
Unusually Fine

Here is the first number of Fox's new short series of 26, "The Magic Carpet of Movietone." Great Britain's splendid Mediterranean fleet forms the central feature of the short subject, and the sequence is unusual and of exceptional quality, being a most excellent naval scene. Natural color adds much to the effectiveness, aided by a musical accompaniment from a portion of the Roxy orchestra, directed by Erno Rapee.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Giants of the Jungle
(Fox)
Great Appeal

Another Magic Carpet number, and your audiences should without doubt get a great kick out of it. Elephants in their native habitat, and they make unusually fine actors. A pachydermic picture which is highlighted by a sequence showing the great beasts bathing in a nearby river at the end of the day. The appeal is unlimited. Any audience will enjoy it.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Silly Scandals
(Paramount)
Neat

In this Talkertoon number little Bimbo enjoys himself hugely and so should the audience. Of course, it is all silliness, in common with the others of the series, but it is also very amusing. Max Fleischer, cartoonist, has added color carefully, which increases the effectiveness to a marked degree.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Publix Starts Building Up Shorts to Counter-balance Double Shows At Competitive Houses

Short subjects will automatically receive a stronger boost when national distributor-circuits get under way active machinery to halt the rapidly growing double featuring "evil."

Publix started the ball a-rolling this week in Chicago, hotbed of double bills, when Division Manager Walter Immerman instructed Publix managers in that territory to hereafter give considerably more thought to advertising and promotional work on short subjects. This is taken as verification of the decision of major interests to build up shorts to the point where they will counterbalance the extra feature on double bills of competitive houses.

Increased use of short subject advertising accessories and increased lobby and newspaper space devoted to short subjects will be the rule. Screen advertising and front displays will also be utilized in the new short subject exploitation plans, and theatre art departments will be instructed to devote special attention to attractive cut-outs for the shorts. Extended use of short subject stills and press sheets will also be the rule. A theatre manager will be expected to possess an intimate knowledge of certain short subjects of special value to his theatre or neighborhood and arrange his displays and advertising accordingly.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending May 7

The program at this house this week was very diversified and was very entertaining from every standpoint. The feature picture, "Ladies' Man," William Powell's latest, packed the house all week. Rubinoff conducted the Paramount Orchestra in "Comic Opera Gems," and it was well done. Rubinoff's violin solo of "My Hero" was well received, as was the entire overture. The Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford organ concert followed (reported on "Organ Solo Column"). The stage show featured Charlie Davis and His Joy Gang, and Shaw and Lee as added attractions, who do their bit in the Cambria-Publix production, "Contrasts," together with Rome and Dunn, Ray, Ellis and Larue and the Sanford-Martin Girls.

The show opens to Charlie Davis, the popular m.c., introducing the Sanford-Martin Girls who perform a "hot" jazz dance routine as the band accompanies them with a "hot" rendition of "St. James Infirmary Blue." As Davis put it, Ray, Ellis & Larue, in contrast presented a graceful waltz. Their work was done well in what appeared to be a "floating" dance. A background lacking in beauty put them at a disadvantage, though they received good applause. Rome & Dunn, two husky men, proved entertaining with their fine singing of "The Peanut Vendor" and "Song of the Fool." Davis and his gang of 14 musicians follow with their usual entertaining playing and singing. The outstanding bit of their presentation this week is the "human" organ, in which the boys' hands, covered by gloves which resemble the "stops" on an organ, are played by Davis as different tones are emitted by the boys. Davis also leads the boys in the fine playing of "Sweet and Hot" and "I Surrender, Dear." Shaw and Lee, "dumb pan" comedians, follow with a lot of laughable stories and gags, the best part of their act proving to be their inimitable dancing. The Sanford-Martin girls, first appearing like a huge bouquet of roses in a setting of painted roses, take their places for a ballet routine that is well performed. Ray, Ellis and Larue close the show with new and sensational adagio stunts.

Omaha, Des Moines Made Unit Towns in Publix Policy

Omaha and Des Moines become unit towns, as a result of Publix's new stage show policy made possible by reduced unit cost, with shows built for smaller towns.

Units will disband at Chicago and new shows constructed. Western unit towns will be Omaha, Denver, Des Moines, Dallas, Houston and New Orleans. Eastern unit towns remain the same.

Le Roy Prinz at Fox

San Francisco—Le Roy Prinz, "vagabond producer", is at the Fox for five weeks, after which he will leave for New York.

Mr. & Mrs. Jesse Crawford

The above perfect likeness of America's premier organist and his charming partner and wife appears here, because this week brings a reunion for them. This is the first time in eleven months that they have presented a twin organ concert at the New York Paramount theatre, where they have been featured since the opening of the house.

In this concert, this popular team featured Mrs. Crawford's new composition, "A Lonely Cavalier." Here's hoping that they will be heard together more reguarly hereafter.

Tab Shows Out at Ybor City

Tampa—Musical tab shows have expired at the Rivoli, Ybor City, after a four weeks' trial. According to Manager N. V. Darley, the first week brought heavy receipts and it looked as though fans were hungry for this addition to the regular picture fare. Receipts started to skid the second week and kept dropping through the third, with the fourth week showing up worse than usual picture takings.

Lange New Head of Musical Dept.

Hollywood—Arthur Lange has been appointed director of the musical department at RKO Pathé studios.

25 Theatres Now Using Bands and Acts

400 Men Employed in Orchestras In Houses Adhering To Live Entertainment Policy

By ED DAWSON

Loew, Inc., is now using more than one thousand artists in its theatres, not including organists.

Of this total approximately 500 are in the pit or in the stagebands, many doubling in brass with assignments both for the overture and the show.

There are 25 houses in the Loew circuit playing either vaudeville or stageshows. In the vaude classification are:

Orpheum, Boston; Loew's, Montreal; State, Newark; State, New York City; Metropolitan, Brooklyn; Bay Ridge, Brooklyn; Pitkin, Brooklyn; Loew's Boulevard, Westchester; Gates, Brooklyn; Orpheum, New York City; National, New York City; Triboro, Astoria, L. I.; 46th Street, Brooklyn, Loew's, Yonkers.

Stageshow situations include: Paradise, New York City; Valencia, Jamaica, L. I.; Jersey City, Jersey City; Palace, Washington; Century, Baltimore; Penn, Pittsburgh; Ohio, Columbus; State, Cleveland; Great Lakes, Buffalo; State, Syracuse; Rochester, Rochester.

In those houses with the vaudeville policy, there are at least 172 men employed in the pit, with an equal number in the stageshow houses. The latter houses, however, increase their personnel to meet the requirements of presentation.

Fourteen theatres of the Loew circuit adhere to a straight vaudeville policy, while 11 play stageshows.

Michaels Ousts Tab Shows

Buffalo—Dewey Michaels has discontinued his combination stock burlesque and talking picture policy at the Palace for the summer, and has gone first run, at 10 and 20 cents, with split weeks. Considerable Warner product not otherwise spotted downtown has been booked.

Shows to Return at Publix

Toledo—Although unconfirmed, it is understood that the Paramount will resume stage shows which were discontinued a month ago in favor of double features. The double feature policy has not been a success.

M. C. Is Transferred

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending April 30

Greeting an overpacked house with that stirring patriotic melody, "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," Herbie, eccentric organist at the most popular house in the South, dove back into antiquity and resurrected from the dim and almost forgotten past "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "Throw Him Down, McClusky," "When You and I were Young, Maggie," "Silver Threads Among the Gold," and "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," using the "ulcerated" slides so popular in the electric theatres at five and 10 cents a throw, more than 16 years ago. "'Member them, don't you?" And made a hit, a real one at that.

In addition "Smiling Henry Berman" made his debut as master of ceremonies, and made good. Comparing favorably with Ben Black, the idol of matinee girls, flappers and the old girls as well, to say nothing of us old codgers in the show business. Henry opened with "Keep Smiling," the number which brought him fame, both from radio fans and the many thousands who have visited the night clubs, following with "Old Man River," which went over big.

This was an introduction to the Publix Unit, billed as "Ol' Man Rythm"—just why nobody on earth can figure out, as every mother's son averaged about 20 summers, with the girls of the assemblage hovering around the danger mark of 16.

There are no headliners on this bill, as evidently the producer went on the motto of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, that "all are equal in the eagle's nest" and signed up a small and competent cast.

Block and Sully dealt out clever patter, a little bit unsophisticated in some spots, but put over so cleverly that even Aunt Hetty, from way up in Maine, could not even find fault if she were here.

Dave White, with his partner in rube makeup, gave a finished performance in patter and dancing, throwing and received much favorable comment. Miss Ruth demonstrated a new departure, a style in lingerie—baggy white cotton ones, at least they looked like cotton with red bows of ribbons a trifle above where the knees should be.

Dave Gould sent some of his best lookers and kickers to set off the entertainment. Dave must have been short of ready cash as a close observer states that the girls had only one garter each and that is on the left leg. One of the best drilled groups seen in this theatre in some time.

As usual the Saenger stage band came on for their share of credit and they deserve it, while Lou Forbes and the Saenger Grand Orchestra—the same boys only with a different front made history again.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Harry Kogen, director of the Farm & Home Hour orchestra, recently received a letter from his "smallest" fan, and enclosing, the letter said, a lock of hair. When Harry opened the folded bit of paper he found three parrot feathers. . . . Jimmy Green and his orchestra substituted for Coon-Sanders while the latter band was barnstorming for a few days. Jimmy has just returned from a successful tour himself, and while playing in the east was rated as one of the first ten most popular radio bands in the country. . . . Avis McDonald, conductor of the studio orchestra at station WJJD, continues to please countless listeners everywhere, and from the way his fan mail is coming in, it won't be very long before it will be necessary for Avis to hire a secretary to answer them. . . .

It is rumored that East & Dumke will soon be the proud possessor of a commercial chain, name to be announced in the very near future. Their salary will be somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,500. . . . Benny Meroff is back at the Oriental theatre after doing a great job in Boston. . . . Ann Roth, sister of Lillian Roth is in town playing the B. & K. theatres, and she certainly is a very clever performer. . . . Joe Sanders sure cut himself a "slice of Mellin" when he beat the writer so bad at a game of billiards the other evening that this poor dispenser of words has decided to take up golf instead. . . . Maurice Sherman recently returned from a sojourn at Biloxi, where he played golf with George Devron. Maurie and the band are now broadcasting over station WIBO in the evening and station WBBM in the afternoon. . . .

. . . Ted Lewis, the one and only, will soon be in Chicago for an indefinite stay. Come on, Ted, we are waiting for you with open arms, for everybody is happy when Ted is around. . . . Johnny Hamp and orchestra will soon replace the Lombardo band, while the latter outfit are on a goodwill tour. . . . Jack Chapman, whose radio orchestra activities date almost from the inception of radio in Chicago, is packing them in at his present location, the Golden Pumpkin. . . . Clyde McCoy, versatile to the point of playing eleven instruments, and doing a good job with each of them at the Terrace Gardens. Clyde is also doing some recording and his record, "Sugar Blues," is selling very big.

Albert Dodson, ace road salesman who sells them all, advises me that Harry Wagner is still the featured attraction at the Lincoln theatre at Springfield, Ill., playing over the air daily for a straight hour. . . . Joe Bennett has written a great song which is likely to take him out of the insurance business. It is called "Building a Home for You," and is being published by Santly Brother. . . . Del Lampe, one of the best orchestra leaders in the business, showed me a photograph of his oldest boy, who is just 12 years old, and believe me he is a chip of the old block. Besides being a handsome boy, he is gifted with that Lampe personality.

$5,000 for Lombardo Band

Cincinnati—Guy Lombardo and his band, now playing Hotel Roosevelt, New York, are said to have been set in at the RKO Albee, vaudefilm, for a week's engagement during June at a reported salary of $5,900.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending May 6

There's variety enough in this show to satisfy the most critical, with a lot of action in Fanchon & Marco's "Russian Art Idea," two bands, a chorus of 20 voices and some specialties for "Warfield anniversary week."

Rube Wolf and his Joyous Jesters stage a small riot in the pit by putting on a burlesque broadcasting act, station represented being "WINE—the breath of North Beach." Customary telegrams were read and the band offered "electrical recordings" of famous artists and musical organizations, including Rudy Vallee, Paul Whiteman, Ted Lewis, and finally Rube Wolf and his Warfield orchestra. Got a good hand.

The curtain goes up on a Russian setting, with a chorus of 20 in full action. Eddie Kube, acrobatic dancer, does a striking dance, manipulating eight knives, on the handles of which are lighted tapers. Mecha Bessoff and his Balalaika orchestra, offer Russian airs and Bell Telaak, master of ceremonies, does a comic violin turn.

A Russian minuet is offered in a regal setting and this gives way to a representation of the Russian Arts Club, of Hollywood, with more singing and music by the balalaika orchestra, and with Bell Telaak and Bud Hanley doing a comedy turn, much of which takes place in the theatre aisle. The inevitable "Volga Boatman" is sung with less of a note of tragedy than is sometimes heard.

The Walters Duo, contortionists, attired as frogs, do a turn on tables and Rube Wolf comes on the stage to introduce the Mechanical Age act, but gives way to a huge bewhiskered Russian who explains it in his own language. This act depicts workers manipulating a maze of machinery and singing as they work.

The Russian idea of a German beer hall is another novelty, with scenic effects arranged to show only the heads and hands of those taking part. Wasil Wania, novelty dancer, does a Russian dance, to the music of a concertina played by himself, and the act comes to an end with the full company on the stage and the contortionists doing a unique turn on a trapeze.

An added attraction for Anniversary Week is the showing of "Who Was in the Movies," a short subject made up of old-time films and showing such stars as Tom Mix, Mack Sennett, Ford Sterling, Charlie Chaplin, Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Pickford and Marie Dressler in their early screen efforts.

Boston Metropolitan

Week ending April 29

Orchestra, directed by Guest Conductor Fabien Sevitsky, rendered the classic, "Pomp & Circumstance," after which Arthur Martel played on the organ "Timely Topics," consisting of highlights from the news in song.

The Publix stage show, "Dream Garden" opened with the Sanford-Martin Girls and Jimmy Ellard and the Met Band rendering a dance number. Then, as contrast, Rae, Ellis and La Rue did a fancy waltz.

Next came May Goff and Charles Barrowes, comedians, and after them came Rome & Dunn, entertainers from Music Box Revues, singing "Deep River," and "Peanut Vender."

For the finale, Sanford-Martin Troupe, dressed in costumes made to resemble roses with butterfly headresses and leaf fans did pretty dancing, and an agile couple did acrobatic stunts.

Arliss' "Millionaire" was on the screen.

Denver Denver

Week ending April 30

For the overture this week Fred Schmitt, director of the Denver Grande orchestra, arranged excerpts from the works of Johann Strauss, and called it "Straussania." Parts of the following were featured: "Pizzicato," Tales from the Vienna Woods," "The Blue Danube" and "Weiner Blut." The overture was the most enjoyable this smooth-running orchestra has presented in the past few weeks.

The stageshow, a Publix presentation, "Romantic Knights," was in harmony with the overture, and fully as enjoyable. Publix would profit if they would send out similar units occasionally.

Starting with a scene in a beer garden, the story progresses until the happy ending, and is woven throughout with just enough singing, foolishness and clever dancing.

Ray Bolger, a favorite in Denver, furnishes the foolishness with his soft shoe and eccentric dancing; and his political speech and other antics keep the crowd laughing. June Worth furnishes the acrobatic dancing, and is good at it, as evidenced by the continuous applause.

Leatrice Wood and Rolfe Gerard provide the vocal high notes, backed with a capable male chorus, part of which were local men. The court scene and final flash were lavish pieces of stage settings, and the whole presentation was thoroughly enjoyed as a welcome relief from the usual Publix units.

Pittsburgh Stanley

Week ending April 30

The stage show called "Porcelain and Jade" is well up to the Stanley average, and a mighty entertaining hour it proves to be.

The inimitable Joe Penner officiates as Guest M. C., and his popularity here is greater than ever. Joe's act is much the same as it has been on many former appearances, but nevertheless he gets the laughs as much as ever. This audience is one of those who never gets tired watching Joe strut his stuff.

Peter Higgins, Pittsburgh's own tenor, is appearing here for his second and last week, and is proving a huge drawing card. Higgins has a gorgeous voice and doubtless will go high in his chosen profession. (This week he has received offers from Ziegfeld as well as Schwab and Mandel.) He sings "Rio Rita," "Close in My Arms," "Eli, Eli" and "Ireland."

Valentine Fox and Emily Walters, in their unusually clever ventriloquism offering, score as usual. They have four dummies, and the conversation and wisecracks fly thick and fast, even when the ventriloquists are drinking from wine glasses. This pair is exceptionally clever, and Miss Walters' impersonation of a crying infant is little short of perfect.

Larry Adler, personable young chap, brings along his harmonica and almost makes the thing talk. Quite clever, and gets a nice hand.

Maureen and Sonny in a fast acrobatic dance put over their offering in fine style.

The stageband and the girls of the ensemble do several numbers in their usual effective style.

Hoxie in $200,000 Suit

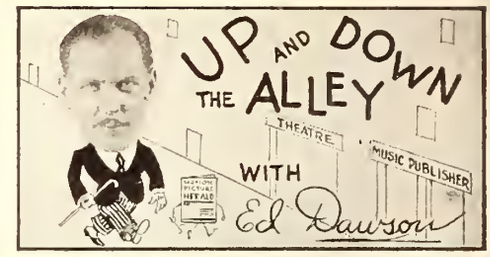
ORGAN SOLOS

"MAC" BRIDWELL (San Antonio RKO-Majestic) is now the new solo organist of the Majestic. He offered the slides: A novelty arrangement on "If I Had a Girl Like You," "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," a parody on "East Side-West Side," new number, "We Can Live On Love"; travesty on "Vagabond Lover"; "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile"; "Sunny Side of the Street"; and closed with "Happy Days Are Here Again," which is the theme song for the city administration and election day is May 12. Bridwell received a nice hand though patrons were not quick to sing with his slides.

MILTON HERTH (Hammond, Ind., Paramount) presents his usual "unusual" organ solo this week, entitling it "Organ Varieties." He incorporates novelty, classics and community singing in these presentations and has been and is doing very well with them. His opening numbers, "Flapperette," "Estellita" and "Song of the Bayou," all played as straight spotlight numbers, were worthy of the tremendous hands awarded him after each number. These were followed by three singing numbers, "Take My Sugar to Tea," "Dream a Little Dream" and "One Little Raindrop." Applause was so good that an encore was rated, so Herth played "99 Out of 100" and "Walking Baby Back Home," with the audience joining in by singing. Herth, incidentally, has the unusual faculty of being able to "sell" a classic or ballet as well as having the most distinctive style of "hot" organ "jazz" this reviewer has ever heard. The singing and ovations he receives prove him a decided feature of the programs of this house.

MR. AND MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount). For the first time in nearly a year Mrs. Crawford joins her husband in presenting a twin organ concert. The program consisted of but three numbers, but this team presented them in an entertaining manner and the audience proved their appreciation by more applause than usual. Mr. Crawford opened the solo with a fine rendition of the new waltz, "Beautiful Love," and followed with an entertaining new novelty song called "Pop-Eye," for two or three choruses. A pleasing atmosphere was lent to the number by the use of a comic strip of Pop-Eye in E-Fect slide form. Mrs. Crawford, seated at the twin console, played the opening bit of "Lonely Cavalier" as a slide announced that she and Leo Robin were the authors of it. She soloed the number as Jesse watched from the opposite console. The second chorus was played by both as Pierce O'Hearn sang through a megaphone for the finish of the program.



RUSS HENDERSON (Worcester, Mass., Plymouth) introduced a cleverly written organ presentation this week, entitled "Fan-Mail," and besides incorporating good singing songs, Russ presented letters in slide form that proved highly amusing and entertaining. These letters appeared on the screen in hand-written form and some of them had the oddest requests and "lines" this audience has ever seen. The singing numbers Henderson chose were: "Falling in Love," "Something to Remember You By," "Blue Again," "Tears" and a final chorus of "Smile Darn Ya Smile." This solo was well played, ably presented and proved very entertaining.

ARLO HULTS (New York City RKO 86) presented this week a pleasing little novelty introduced as "It's Time to Sing," and sing they did. Opening with a special lyric version to "99 Out of a 100" and then orally explaining the next number, which is "Three Little Words," with missing words to be filled in by the audience, Hults then played "When Your Lover Has Gone," "When I Take My Sugar to Tea" and two more special choruses of "99 Out of a 100." Every one in the audience sang and apparently enjoyed the solo.

RON AND DON (Philadelphia Fox) presented a program of community singing numbers, but didn't seem to be able to get this audience in the mood to sing this week, though it has usually. The program consisted of their singing and playing of "I'm Alone Because I Love You," "Sing Song Girl," "You're the One I Care For," and "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." The boys play a good organ, or rather two good organs, and the audience, though reluctant to sing, nevertheless enjoyed the boys.

GERTA GALE (Joplin, Mo., Paramount). Miss Gale, who has been at this house for some time, this week presented another of her highly entertaining and original organ novelties. This one is entitled "Krazy Musical Friends." This week she gets away from the usual singing stunts and offers a well played solo of three numbers, namely, "Piccolo Pete," "The Peanut Vendor" and "Kitten on the Keys." As Miss Gale played the first number, a character of "Piccolo Pete" lit up from a shadow box that was placed upon the organ. For the background of "Peanut Vendor," a shadow of the vendor and his wagon appeared as Miss Gale interpolated whistle effects as she played this difficult number. As the last number was played, it was illustrated in the same manner, with the addition that during the playing of the last few bars, all three characters appeared and were lit up with flood lights, making the shadows appear very grotesque. Miss Gale's originality, showmanship and fine playing are going a long way in building up big popularity for herself.

KEN WRIGHT (Green Bay Orpheum) presented a timely community organ novelty, entitled "Baseball," which seemed to fit the public interest very well. Addressing the audience direct, Wright informed them that song-hits were to be used as base-hits, and with a cleverly worded dialogue requested them all to make home-runs. The solo opened with gags fitted to "Wabash Blues," "Running Between the Raindrops," and "Smile Darn Ya Smile." Wright receives requests from the patrons each week and always builds his programs to fit these. This week the songs used were: "If I Could Be With You," "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone," "Moonlight On the Colorado," "Dream a Little Dream of Me" and some parodies on "Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" and "Just a Gigolo." The solo closed with "Smile Darn Ye" and this audience doesn't just smile, it laughs and has a real good time. Everyone joins in the singing and the applause is always very good.

Hello Everybody

Due to the recent "let-down" of employees by the, so many, music publishers in the past week or so, everyone who is still working are "on their toes" and can hardly find time to eat before getting back to their respective offices. Charlie Gordon of Santly's says, "The only reason they even take time to eat is "from hunger'." . . . That's a favorite expression of his. . . . Rudy Vallee's nose is out of joint this week over at the Brooklyn Paramount, due to the personal appearance of Buddy Rogers who is not only packing them in the house but for blocks around the theatre. . . . The irony of it all. . . . All these beautiful (and not so beautiful) girls striving for a glimpse of their suppressed desire and he with his stage smile bowing to them, etcetera, while his mind is probably miles away . . . and not really seeing any of them. . . .

Joe Decatur, advertising manager for Leo Feist, Inc., is muchly enthused over the many responses that the first broadcast of "Moonlight Saving Time" brought and is bringing. . . . The song was first introduced the day "Daylight Saving" went into effect and it is timely. . . . It's a great summer tune, is cleverly handled and the tune itself is a "darb." . . . Incidentally Harry Richman and Irving Kahal are the authors. . . . The newly formed corporation of Mills Dance Orchestras, Inc., has established itself permanently in spacious quarters located in the Mills building. . . . This corporation has under its wing some of the most famous colored orchestras in the world. . . . Among them, Duke Ellington and his Famous orchestra, Cab Calloway and his Missourians, Russell Wooding and his Red Caps, Mills Blue Rhythm Boys and King Carter and his orchestra. . . .

Charles Miller, president of the Miller Music, Inc., is happy over the firm's acquisition of the sole and exclusive publication rights for the forthcoming Ziegfeld Follies. . . . The score will be written by Harry Revel, Mack Gordon, Ben Trivers, Jack Murray and Ben Oakland. . . . Mr. Miller will personally supervise the making of the orchestrations, having acted in a similar capacity for Mr. Ziegfeld for the past twenty years. . . .

Bill Wiemann, sales manager for Marks Music Co., has just returned from an enjoyable and profitable trip to Havana. . . . He was accompanied by Mrs. Wiemann, who has been his constant travelling companion since their marriage four years ago. . . . Mrs. Wiemann was formerly secretary to Mr. Edward B. Marks and still retains an active interest in the business. . . . Carl Rond, former organist in Battle Creek, Mich., and Youngstown, Ohio, passed away a few days ago. . . . We extend our sympathy. . . . Katherine Kaderly, former organist at the Met, Brooklyn, and lately "Jackie" of the organ team of "Jackie and Jean" at the Paramount Denver, has been teamed up with Don Baker, who was house organist at the Brooklyn Paramount, for the twin console job at the Staten Island Paramount which "Betty and Jean" are vacating for the summer. . . . Russ Henderson, organist at the Worcester, Mass., Plymouth was in town for a few days and is now back on the job up in Worcester. . . .

Well S'long. . . .

THEATRE RECEIPTS

With spring weather coming on the motion picture atres are returning to a normal gross. In many ances, this week has shown an increase over the vious. This was not due alone, however, to climatic conditions. Rather, the pictures themselves were responsible. Such pictures as "Trader Horn," "City Lights," etc., have been doing a remarkable business.

HOLLYWOOD

NEWS ITEM: Queen Marie of Rumania is to appear on the stage according to reports received from authoritative circles. The Queen is to make her stage debut in a play written by herself. It is expected she will appear in the fall.

PROBABLE HISTORY OF EXPLOITATION CAMPAIGN

First night reviews: THE RUMANIAN BEAGLE

The most charming, beautiful, talented, gracious star ever on the stage is Queen Marie, our darling, lovely, Queen Marie. The play was written by Her Majesty. It is the most marvelous, greatest, dandiest play ever written. Better than Shakespeare. Hooray for the Queen.

Announcement in THE RUMANIAN BEAGLE following day:

The editor wishes to announce the resignation of its eminent dramatic critic, M. Pastafazool, who has been appointed Minister of the Exchecquer by Her Majesty, Queen Marie, last night.

Extract from the Communist paper, THE RUMANIAN RED HOT

Another play opened last night. Couldn't tell name of star because programs were not given away in balcony. Looks like another stock company. The fat dame who starred probably owns the show. Full of paste jewelry. Lousy show. Lousy star. Lousy.

Announcement in THE RUMANIAN RED HOT following day:

The editor is sorry to announce the demise of its beloved dramatic critic, Honest John Alleyoop, who was run over by a two-ton truck while sitting in his parlor. The coroner is unable to discover whether his death was due to the truck, the arsenic in his coffee, the knife wounds in his back, or the bullet hole in his head. He is dead, however. Albert Bouncer succeeds him.

Announcement in THE RUMANIAN BEAGLE one week after premiere:

Her Majesty, Queen Marie, announces the creation of a National Theatre Week, to begin immediately. Every citizen is required to attend two theatre performances during the week or submit to a hundred dollar fine. There is only one show now running in the country.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury:

For some mysterious reason we have collected over $2,000,000 in the last week. Thousands of hundred-dollars fines have poured in, all with notes running about like this: Enclosed find my hundred dollar fine for not attending second performance of play. You're being gypped at a hundred dollars. You could have got a thousand.

Announcement from The Royal Palace two weeks after premiere:

The army and navy have been given temporary leave in response to their request to see Her Majesty Queen Marie in her play. Without pay.

Announcement in local papers:

Madame Lupescu will open in "If I Were Queen" at the Music Box tomorrow night.

Box Office Report in Rumanian Edition of Motion Picture Herald:

"If I Were Queen" smash hit. Other show in town dying.

Announcement in THE RUMANIAN BEAGLE:

A gang of Communists last night bombed the Music Box. Queen Marie said she was sure they were Communists.

Announcement in local papers:

The management of the Royal Theatre announces the acquisition of a number of noted players to be added to its present cast. They are: The Prince of Wales, who has not yet accepted; King Alfonso, who has just recently closed a long engagement in Madrid, and Bobby Jones, prominent film star

Well, by now you get the idea. That's what's the matter with the motion picture business right now. We need a couple of stars who can "persuade" the public to attend. I got a remedy. The industry can have it for what it's worth.

First, we frame a swell war with Italy. Well, we lay down. So, what happens? Mussolini takes us over. So he's King. O.K. We give him a picture contract. He stars. Whoops! Sell-out.

Studios, 'Changes Will Discontinue Issuance of Cues

Hollywood—Establishment of the Standard Release Print has made possible the abandonment of cue sheets for projection of sound pictures, according to the Technical Bureau of the Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Studios and exchanges have been notified by Lester Cowan, manager of the bureau, that distribution of cue sheets with prints may be safely discontinued. Spaces left for the purpose in the standard print will be used by studios for any special information or statement of fader settings which the projectionist should have to run the show. Approval of this change in practice has been given by the Producers-Technicians Committee of the Academy.

Abandonment of cue sheets will mean a saving of several thousand a year to each of the companies which have been sending them out with prints since the introduction of sound, it is stated.

DES MOINES, IOWA

DEAR HERALD:

Iowa has two slogans, both of which are borne out by the facts. One is IT'S THE STATE WHERE THE TALL CORN GROWS and the other, IOWA HAS STEPPED OUT OF THE MUD. The first is proved by her corn cribs filled with corn, and the second by the fact that the mudturtles and bullfrogs have deserted her highways and taken to the swamps, although they had to go a long ways to find a swamp.

Iowa's good roads have proved what we have always contended, that Nebraska's good roads would eventually have an influence on her and she would "Step Out of the Mud." That's why it's so important to live so close to Nebraska, and now if the Jayhawkers will wake up and join the good roads procession we will feel that we hadn't taken Nebraska away from the Indians for nothing, but at that we sometimes wonder if we didn't get the worst of it, for she will elect a democratic governor occasionally in spite of all we can do, but we can't blame the Indians for that.

It beats all what a lot of fuss a female cow can kick up sometimes. You remember what Mrs. O'Leary's bovine did to Chicago when she kicked the lamp over, since which time Al Capone has taken charge of matters and has educated the citizens to the use of home brew instead of milk, and now these bossies out here in Iowa are objecting to being probed with a suction pump in a tuberculin test and these Hawkeye farmers are backing them up to a point where the governor has had to call out the home guards to settle the rumpus. When it comes to being a good citizen or a good fighter, we will place our dough on these Hawkeyes every time. You remember the RAINBOW DIVISION, don't you? Well, Iowa does.

All For Twenty Cents

Here in Des Moines tonight we saw one theatre that was putting on a double feature program, a comedy and news reel for 20 cents, and in addition was giving each woman customer a bottle of perfume, and if you don't call that bad business and business suicide then you wouldn't know suicide from a Sunday School picnic. It would seem that the next thing to do would be to give away a house and lot with each ticket to stimulate business.

As we view it, the value of a ticket at the box office should be measured by the entertainment offered the same as the value of any goods purchased over the counter, and when theatre admissions are sold on any other basis it is bad business and will be ruinous in the end. If we went into a store to buy a suit of clothes and the merchant would offer to throw in a sack of flour and 10 pounds of sugar you would conclude there was something wrong with the clothes, wouldn't you?

Wives and Wives

We were filled plumb full on "wives" today. At a matinee at the Paramount they were playing a Fox picture, "DOCTOR'S WIVES," and at the Orpheum tonight we saw "LONELY WIVES," a Pathe picture, and although both of these pictures were very good, it was too much wives for a man of our temperament and having no political affiliations.

The man who wrote the dialogue for "DOCTORS' WIVES" certainly had a knowledge of what constitutes sensible dialogue for sensible people, and the man who selected Warner Baxter and Joan Bennett to play in this picture not only knew his onions, but he knew his players, and the man who directed the picture evidently thought that nasty suggestions were not necessary to high-class entertainment. We enjoyed the picture, and when we enjoy 'em they must be good. You'll take our word for that, won't you, Gertie?

"LONELY WIVES" is different from what you would expect from the title. It's a comedy. It has a lot of funny situations worked out in a sensible way. Both of these pictures ought to be good enough for any audience.

Agreeable Surprise

It is a quite agreeable surprise to drive up to the home of a theatreman who you suppose is a total stranger, and find that you are meeting a couple of old-time friends. This happened to us when we were in Sidney a few days ago and called on Mr. and Mrs. Budd, who operate the theatre there. Mrs. Budd had her arms in a tub of soapsuds clear up to her elbows and she didn't want to shake hands with us at first, but finally said, "Oh, well, from the looks of you, a little soapsuds won't hurt you, anyway." We don't know whether the Sidney folks realize it or not, but they have about as nice a couple managing their theatre as any town has a right to expect.

We stayed all night in Clarinda for two reasons; one was because it was night when we got there and the other because our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Van Tasel, live there. They used to operate the Armory theatre. While we were having some refreshments after the show, Van bantered us to get up early the next morning and go and play a round of golf with him, and when they banter us to do that we lose all sense of responsibility and don't care if the whole darn country goes Democratic.

Van told us that they had a pretty sporty course, and Van was right. You have to either shoot up a steep hill or down a steep hill, and there are eight creeks on the course and we played nine of 'em and two canyons besides a lot of trees and the railroad right of way. Every time we would shoot in a creek Van would laugh at us, and that wasn't a very nice thing to do. That course was intended for mountain goats instead of short-winded men, and some day we are going to get Van on a real golf course built for men and then it will just be too bad for him.

Stop Worrying

We all worry about a whole lot of things that never happen. Let's stop it. If your wife wants to run off with the plumber, let her go, the plumber will get the worst of it, so let him worry. If you have a carbuncle on the back of your neck, think of poor Job. If you have a longing to live in Hollywood, think of what Los Angeles has to put up with. Stop worrying.

Sage and Sensible

We drove up to the theatre in Adel and just as we were getting out of the car a perfectly strange lady came up to us, and, without any introduction, said, "Mr. Jenkins, drive me up home, please." We wondered if she thought we were running a taxi. When we got up to her home she said, "Now, come in and I will introduce you to my husband." We said, "Now, lady, let's understand this husband business. Has this aforesaid husband of yours a nervous trigger finger, and how many notches has he carved on his gun?" She assured us that he was harmless, so we went in and she called to her husband and said, "Come in here and meet an old buzzard that we have been longing to meet for a number of years." If there is a finer couple than Mr. and Mrs. Sage who operate the Rialto theatre at Adel we wouldn't know where to direct you to find them.

A Good Memory

It has been almost five years since we met Mr. Pettit, who operates the Iowa theatre at Winterset, and he still remembered us. He's got a good memory. Not only that, but he's got a fine theatre and is a swell fellow and that's about all Winterset needed to make the town one of the live spots of Iowa. We hope to go back some day.

"In Conference"

Occasionally we find a chain theatre manager in the smaller towns whose arm is too short to permit him to scratch his head. If he is drawing 25 dollars a week you have to make an appointment at a specified time to see him. The gentleman with brass buttons on the door will say "Sorry, sir, but the manager is in conference and can't be disturbed."

This "In conference" stuff has kept the public from breaking in on scenes that wouldn't look well on the screen. If the chain management would change these Willie boys as often as their mothers did, it would benefit the industry a whole lot. We are glad that they are not all that way.

THE HERALD COVERS the field LIKE an APRIL SHOWER

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Analyzing the Film Mart

BOYS, DO YOU WANT A GOOD SPECIAL? GET FOX'S "BODY AND SOUL." It's different and has a good suspense plot to keep your audience guessing. Fox's "Big Trail" will pull better than your usual fare and is O. K.

First National's "Sunny" is a very pleasing picture that you can run at a special. Our people liked it fine. Fox's "Song of My Heart" is a mighty fine show, all around, and you'll like John McCormack's singing. It is a heart appeal story for all classes. First National's "Silver Horde" was mighty well liked, and can be run on your best nights.

For program fare would recommend "Sea Wolf." This has wonderful acting in it, also RKO's "Danger Lights" is good for Saturday. Buck Jones' "The Avenger" (Col.) O. K. for Saturday.

Paramounts programs refuse to draw. "Only the Brave," "Social Lion," "Ladies Love Brutes" (good play) and "Dangerous Nan McGrew" (awful) drew empty seats.

Thank goodness we are through with Educational two-reelers. Andy Clyde gives everyone the "horrors." Universal's Oswald Cartoons seem to register O. K. Mickey Mouse (RKO) takes pretty well, but many kick on the suggestive bits so dear to the hearts of Hollywood's funmakers.

Business is at the zero point. People will not come out except to something extra good—and, believe me, my patrons can sense the good and bad ones. How they know whether it will be good or bad is beyond me. Of course, I read the Press Reporter too much, and find there that they are all "wonderful," but my patrons do not read these alluring reports and just have a hunch, which I will say is generally right.

I see Paramount has a new racket and will try to have us peddle their paid trade advertising for them. That won't last long—that's a cinch! People groan out loud at any kind of screen advertising, even local slides, and if they have to see it injected into pictures, they'll just quit coming!

The Barnum days are over for the picture industry; all the public want of us are excellent entertaining pictures. When the industry gets down to the sole business of producing A-1 specials, everybody will be happy again, producer, exhibitor and patron. Weak program pictures at 25-50c admission simply will not work. We would be far better off to run two extra fine specials a week at 25-50c, and one western or action picture for Saturday at lower prices, than to attempt to make program pictures pay.

But where can we secure 104 big pictures a year? They are not made, nor even are 52 a year made. More big ones is what we all need. What say you?—PHILIP RAND, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho.

On Block Booking

I NOTE IN THE FILM DAILY THAT Warner Brothers, who also control First National, who they treated like a poor relation the past season, if you are to judge by the product they turned out, are out this season for all or none 70 pictures.

A small town run has a potential run of 156 pictures a year, with three changes a week, with four holidays that he runs one picture. Any exhibitor that ties up that many pictures from one producer, using half of his playing time, is a sucker.

His chance for lemons in this many pictures are enough to break him wide open and put the sheriff's sign on the door. Even Paramount this year had many pictures that did not do business because of the quality. Notably "Feet First" for one, "Only Saps Work" and many others.

The law of averages is against a block of this many pictures, as we have all found out to our sorrow in many seasons. The chance for hits are better in a block of from 30 to 50 pictures than in a block of 70 or 72.

At least this has been the experience of the writer.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia City Theatre Co., Columbia City, Indiana.

The Industry's Faults

I WISH THAT I COULD APPEAL TO other exhibitors to write to your department, as the exhibitor letters in your magazine, when it used to publish many of them, were easily the most important thing in it. I notice that this department is petering out, and I write this in hope that other exhibitors will write similar letters.

Let me first say that the producer has suddenly gone high-hat and that we are getting any quantity of pictures with lace frilled boudoirs, silk-hatted clever gentlemen, with elegant diction and manners, ten thousand dollar limousines, etc., with ultra-sophisticated stories of ladies and gentlemen to whom money is no object and life a race against boredom.

We are receiving NO stories to speak of about human beings, animated by understandable motives. Isn't it possible to produce a few stories about the one hundred and eighteen million Americans who don't dress for dinner every night? Isn't it possible to put a punch into a high-grade production? In real life 32,500 people are killed by automobiles every year, a quarter of a million people are injured, thousands are blowing their brains out over "Hoover Prosperity," they are dying terrible deaths, etc. There is drama in real life, among real people. We are being deluged with mambly pamply cleverness.

We are being sexed to death. Ladies are parading their hips and legs at every change of pictures. No picture is now complete without a mother and her daughter on trial. About four things are being done by producers and will continue to be done until the box-offices drop into the gutters.

When will the producer realize that he caters to farm hands, bootblacks, prostitutes, unemployed bankers, society women, race track touts, bootleggers and ten thousand other types? The hasher is just as important at the box-office; in fact, more important than the ultra-sophisticate.

I wish to complain that the press sheets are getting poorer. I have before me the Fox press sheet on El Brendel in "Mr. Lemon of Orange." It is terrible, there isn't a decent cut in it; the only good illustrations are on the front page and they are not available for exhibitors. The whole Fox press staff seem unable to put out one decent press book.

The Paramount people employ bad artists, two-thirds of their cuts showing important people are so badly put out that they look like hack drivers and washerwomen and in no way resemble the original. The press sheet on "Rango" is so bad it is incredible.

There is no question in my mind that the miserable stupidity of several advertising departments decreases the gross of the picture business in this United States millions of dollars a year. They should employ camera men more, and very rotten artists less. They should learn what the picture is about, what it is in the picture that they have to sell, and present the facts to the public in a striking manner. This they are most miserably failing to do.

Hy Daab should take a bunch of these alleged publicity men under his wing for six months and teach them the rudiments of their business.

I wish to speak about the music tax and impress on the exhibitors the fact that this tax is being collected from them indirectly by the producer, that it is one of the examples of which we have so many, of the producers' greed. It is a rotten graft. It should be bitterly fought.

At the next session of Congress exhibitors should see to it that the whole Congress is thoroughly covered with a detailed statement of the greed of the men who make our pictures. Their willingness to take nickels from us via the music tax and indirectly through the screen trailer service is bled white by the producer for the use of negative to make the trailers, and that the producers take a big part of the screen service people's profits away from them. The joke is that the producer owned circuits then often use other brands of trailers and save money. That is why trailers sell at such exorbitant prices. Impress this on your Congressmen when you write to them describing the gang that is exploiting us.

Attention of Congressmen should be called to the fact that the producer is now using our screens without paying for same, for advertising. This is a violation of faith and honesty as we all have on the backs of our contracts agreements to protect us from this miserable graft. It is a measure of their stupidity and it will kill their own theatres if it is kept up.

The copyright law is being used by the producer unfairly as is to be expected. The exhibitor should see to it that the attention of Senators and Congressmen is called to this. Real rackcteering takes place through the copyright idea. It is a producers' dirty racket. The MOTION PICTURE HERALD says that it is impartial between producer and exhibitor. I have read a great deal that I thought was warped and twisted that served the purpose of the gang that cluster around Mr. Hays and foolishly listen to his bad advice, who print illegal contracts and with a persistence worthy of a better cause, pledge themselves to continue practices that will yet break them, and place them where the railroads were twenty years ago, viz, face to face with an aroused public opinion that will kick their slats in.

A demand for censorship is steadily growing in the backwoods, towns near here are serving arbitrary notice on the exhibitors to cut out the film filth, or have their houses closed. Exhibitors defending film production today are foolish, as they will be licked, because in fact and in truth motion pictures ARE today a demoralizing influence, they are immoral and the output of gangster pictures undoubtedly WILL produce criminals.

Mr. Will Hays is being depended upon too much and this is another place where he is being depended upon. He is expected to go out and tell the ladies' clubs that the technique of crime as shown continuously in motion pictures will not demoralize or make criminals of boys between sixteen and eighteen, when any person with horse sense knows quite well that a continued output of these things will and does make criminals of them in many instances.

Trusting you will find room for this and that other exhibitors will write you their reviews and opinions in greater quantity than in the last few months, I am—HERMAN J. BROWN, The New Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

The Days of Miracles Are Over!

FOR some strange reason, very difficult to explain, there still remains the peculiar belief that the right man can pull a house out of the red and into deep black in the space of a few weeks.

But if the truth were known to all, you would discover that theatres, which were once losing propositions and are now making big money, arrived at the profitable stage through slow, careful nursing and handling. No "miracle man" stepped in and by use of several million cubic feet of hot air turned it into S. R. O. business.

The most successful showmen the world over are men who tackle a proposition by first studying all its angles, and then, through the slow process of revamping the theatres, policy, etc., the house begins to show the effects of sensible treatment.

Beware of the braggart; the man who comes out of nowhere and promises to do the most absurd and impossible of things for a theatre that has been a losing proposition for many months. The longer they are on promises, the shorter they will be on delivery. The more they claim they will do, the less will be their accomplishments.

One of the smartest personnel men in showbusiness is far less concerned with the applicant's past performances than with what he can do in the future. The check-up employed on a new man is merely to determine his past experiences (so that they will feel certain he has had the experience he claims) and to see that his record is clean in other respects. From that point it is entirely up to the man to deliver the goods.

But there are many small circuits and independents who are always scouting around looking for that impossible "miracle-man" to take over a losing theatre and make it a profitable house in the short space of a few weeks. Naturally, such miracles being rare, these bosses are never finished looking for new men, so those high-powered promisers, having passed through the few weeks of probation, are told to make way for the next wind-bag.

What does it get any of this procession of managers? Nothing but a lot of grief and headaches. But they were probably so hard up for a job that they would promise to deliver the Woolworth Building in order to get the berth.

And what does it get the theatre owner? Just about as much as it got the manager, with a shade the worse of it, because they have had their theatre in the hands of too many strange managers, none of whom had the opportunity of remaining long enough to finish anything he may have started when he took the house over.

The men who hire managers, as well as the managers themselves, must understand that whether the house for which a man is required, is on a paying or losing basis, it will take any new man fully two months to understand the theatre, the class of patronage being catered to and to start to find those little faults which must be looked after and corrected through a slow, but definite policy.

To walk into a house and throw the help into a panic by firing and hiring; to completely disrupt the routine of the staff, in so far as it applies to the handling of the patrons; to make radical policy changes; to make a complete aboutface in the advertising arrangements; these and other angles will hurt a theatre far more than any one man can rectify in a short span of time, but it's the damage that will certainly result from making a man feel he must do impossible things in a span of a few weeks.

If those who are charged with the responsibility of hiring managers would care for a few suggestions we might advise that they select their men with care and then give them every possible chance to make good free from all interference and annoyances. If the man is "right" he will soon start to show his ability in the methods he uses to operate the theatre and sell its attractions to the public. He will start to suggest changes, improvements, etc., as soon as he gets to understand the house. Not before.

"Chick."

Meyers Manages The Strand In Dolgeville For Schine Circuit

Meet Marcus Ash Meyers, who manages the Strand Theatre in Dolgeville, New York, for the Schine Circuit. And he does a good job of it, too, for he has had a good deal of experience along the show-selling line.

We had some recent pictures of Meyers' work, but unfortunately they didn't come out so well, so we couldn't pass them along to you. But the contribution served to show us that he intends to be—and in fact is—an active showman and contributor to the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club. In the past, we have received many valuable slants from showmen on the Schine Circuit and we are sure that these slants, when passed along, were put to use by other showmen.

Since it is the custom of all showmen in small towns to become thoroughly acquainted with their local public, its likes and its dislikes, we can expect to see some good work along from Mr. Meyers, as he is doubtless well informed on these various slants that form an invaluable and indispensable part of his show-selling.

Oke, Marcus! We are glad to welcome you on the Club pages and we look forward to hearing from you very soon so that we can place you right along in line with the other live-wires on your circuit. Oke?

Some Good Work Is Being Turned Out By F. F. Kislingbury

Though at the Paramount Theatre in Plainfield, N. J., just a short time, F. F. Kislingbury, manager of the house, nevertheless is giving his house some marvelous work. Here's how he secured a fine institutional plug recently.

During the week of March 2, in connection with the "National Flower Appreciation Contest," Kislingbury sold all the Plainfield florists on the idea of a flower show in the Paramount Theatre. The slogan of all the floral shops, and used in all their advertisements, was "See the Paramount Theatre Flower Show."

The Parent-Teachers' Association was visited by Kislingbury; and he sold them the idea of entering all children up to 14 years of age in the contest. The contest was endorsed by educational leaders throughout the country. All florists' ads carried copy one week in advance and during the week of the Flower Show. Placards were used on all bulletin boards in all schools throughout the city. A line was carried regarding the Flower Show in the Paramount Theatre ads.

Banners on the Flower Show were displayed on all florists trucks. The theatre 24-sheets, selling the feature attraction, were sniped, reading "Flower Show March 6-12." All packages delivered by florists carried Paramount Theatre copy. Window cards in all flower shops carried displays not only selling the Flower Show but the feature attraction. The service staff at the Paramount Theatre wore flowers one week in advance and during the Flower Show, furnished by the florists.

All copy used by the florists and by the theatre emphasized that the "Flower Show Is Free." This was true, as far as the Flower Show in itself was concerned. But the advantage to the theatre was that it was necessary to purchase a theatre admission before attending the Flower Show. The theatre patrons, in other words, were getting two shows in one, but incidentally, the theatre profited. And, of course, that is what Kislingbury was interested in.

Kempkes Sends Rurals Paper Subscription Instead Of Programs

Here's a novel plan that you might like to make use of. It's the work of T. J. Kempkes, manager of the Bonham Theatre in Fairbury, Neb. Look it over and if you like the stunt, take it with his compliments.

Kempkes received numerous requests for advertising programs on his shows to be sent to the rural residents weekly. Still he didn't get enough requests to keep the unit cost on it down to the point where he could profitably afford to mail it out. So in the place of heralds, he entered a subscription to the local paper in the name of the person requesting that he be placed upon the theatre mailing list. This subscription costs Kempkes $3 a year. The newspaper stamps all copies sent to the theatre's subscribers with a rubber stamp reading, "Compliments Bonham Theatre, Fairbury, Neb." So Kempkes, through the newspaper medium, has advertising on all of his attractions going into these homes for one year at a very low cost. The stunt has a good will value also.

Thanks, Kempkes, for letting us see this one. And listen! Since you seem to be on the alert in your town, how about passing along some more of your work, so that we, in turn, can pass it along to the rest of the showmen the world over?

Modern Appliance Idea On "Easiest Way" Used by Brown

William Brown, manager of the Fox Marboro Theatre in Brooklyn, sure was on his toes and had his sense of humor to the fore when he played Constance Bennett in "The Easiest Way."

Bill tied up the Electric Light Company, who supplied him gratis with a display of modern electrical appliances. The connection between the display and the picture was expressed on a large card reading "MAKE 'THE EASIEST WAY'" the slogan in your home by using modern applicances —then see—Constance Bennett in "THE EASIEST WAY" at the theatre, playdates, etc.

The display was placed in the foyer against a background of flowered satin. The only expense involved was the cost of two small cards giving credit to the company cooperating, and from what we can discover by looking at the accompanying photograph Bill didn't leave a stone unturned in his effort to put this one over. From what he tells us, it created plenty of comment, and, since it was put up one week in advance of the showing, we know he's in the money on this one.

Not a bad gag, boys, is it? And it's just typical of the kind of showmanship he is displaying over at the Marboro. Sorry I missed you when you dropped in at the office, Bill. Better luck next time.

"Made In Rochester" Was Label Borne By Kaufman's Ace Stunt

Rochester, N. Y., had its own movie recently! And with it an all-Rochester cast, dialogue, scenes and tunes. Credit lines being in order, as they always seem to be in all good motion pictures, we'll flash across the screen that it was: "An Albert P. Kaufman Idea." The popular showman-manager of the Capitol Theatre in Rochester certainly hit the town amidships on his latest stunt. To hear "Holly Wood" columnist on the local Journal-American tell it in one of the Rochester papers, the stunt came about like this:

"A little more than three weeks ago, Albert P. Kaufman, Capitol Theatre manager, came to the Journal-American office with an idea. He told the executives that he believed there was sufficient talent in Rochester to put over a local talkie. The thing had never been done by amateurs, but Kaufman figured Rochester could handle the assignment. Collaborating with the Capitol Theatre, the Journal-American issued a call for candidates for roles in the picture and the project got underway immediately.

"More than 1,100 reported for voice and screen tests. While these tests were being made, the Journal and the Capitol Theatre opened a scenario contest to the public and "Love on the Run," written by Kenneth Thomas, was selected for the picture. Experts from the movie industry, Director Joe McGuire, Cameraman Frank King and Harold Lewis, sound technician, working in connection with David Kesler, Journal-American dramatic critic, and Albert Kaufman, made the final selection of the cast Saturday, February 14.

"Then came a record-breaking achievement. The movie crew and the cast went to work that very night and five days later the picture was completed!

"Members of the cast and their friends attended a pre-showing of 'Love on the Run' Thursday night at the Capitol Theatre. They were pleased with the picture—and happy that they had made a success of their first movie venture.

"Mr. Kaufman complimented the cast on its work. He said:

> "'Rochester movie fans are going to get a big kick out of this picture. When they consider that the whole picture from start to finish was made in five days and under the toughest conditions—bad weather and long hours of hard, steady work without rest—they are bound to give every member of the cast full credit for a remarkable job.'

"The writer feels that no one deserves more credit than Al Kaufman. The theatre manager had the courage to plunge into a project that had never been attempted with amateur players. He stood by throughout the entire production, assisting with the direction of the picture and serving in an advisory capacity in every phase of the work.

"It took a great deal of courage. Three years ago Mr. Kaufman produced two pictures with amateur casts in Syracuse. These, however, were silent pictures. The making of a talkie was a much more difficult assignment.

"'Love on the Run' is a fast-moving comedy with plenty of thrills and special features. The theme song, 'Love on the Run,' was written by Kenneth Thomas.'"

We don't think that we have to say more about Kaufman's work. "Holly Wood" seems to have covered it completely. Kaufman himself has this to say:

"The first local all-talking picture venture has been a big success for us, and I am sure that other theatres will profit by attempting the same thing. The tie-up I had with the Hearst newspaper was a natural. They gave me 100 per cent co-operation and also the use of their trucks.

Which, if you ask us, is checking and double checking ace showmanship. And now for a word or two about the photos before we sign off. The one heading this story is a composite of all of the newspaper publicity obtained on the campaign. It represents thousands of dollars worth of free advertising. The other photo accompanying this story shows three of the 20 delivery trucks that carried plugs on the feature film to all parts of Rochester and its suburbs.

We think that Kaufman deserves a word of commendation for this corking stunt that has placed him again before the public as one of the real live-wires of Rochester's show circles.

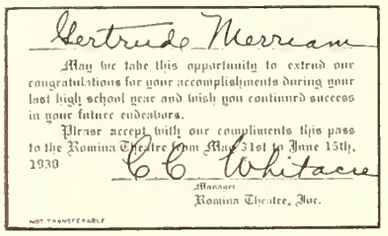
Graduation Days Are Next!



Smart showmen will find various ways and means of tying their theatres into the commencement exercises of the different grammar and high schools.

If the local school auditorium is too small to house the number of people who generally seek admission to such exercises, you can grab a wealth of good will and publicity by arranging for these exercises to be held in your theatre. If the school authorities are at all appreciative of your offer to cooperate they will gladly arrange the affair for morning or noon. You may therefore avoid losing even a portion of your matinee.

Another excellent idea is to work out a card of congratulation to each of the graduating class in the form of an invitation to the theatre. For this purpose we are reproducing three of the cards used in the past for this purpose.

If you can work any one of them into your own plan for graduation days, go to it. If you have a still better slant, be a sport and pass it along for the benefit of your brother members.

A single or double truck cooperative page might be worked out with the theatre getting a good break for the idea. Most of the merchants like to get in on a gag of this kind because of the fact that they all have something or other to sell the graduates. Build the idea around a "Graduate's Night" at your theatre. Introduce all the class officers from the stage, if you are willing to stand for it; let 'em give their class or school cheers, sing their songs. Decorate the inside and outside of the theatre to fit the occasion. We believe this idea will go over.

Altogether you can find many and valuable means of making Graduation Days money days for your theatre. It's up to the manager.

Attractions Playing The Palace, Norwich, Are Always Exploited

"Whatever plays my house is sold," declared R. B. Hamilton, manager of the Palace Theatre, Norwich. Continuing, he adds: "If it's good enough to play the theatre, it has enough merit to rate exploitation."

Which is why Hamilton gives his vaudeville some ace breaks in the town. Special heralds are made up on each new show, and devoted to the vaudeville and pictures playing during the week. Then, of course, there's the Palace News, the theatre house organ which is distributed weekly from the house. Composed of four pages, made up in tabloid newspaper style, it contains some very interesting bits on the coming attractions. The issue that we have on hand contains, on the back page, a sort of contest, in which 23 picture, thumbnail cuts, of favorite Warner players is run as part of a tie-up gag with a local radio dealer, who agreed to furnish a set free in return for publicity. The stunt is one that is causing quite some comment and will doubtless result in increased business for the theatre.

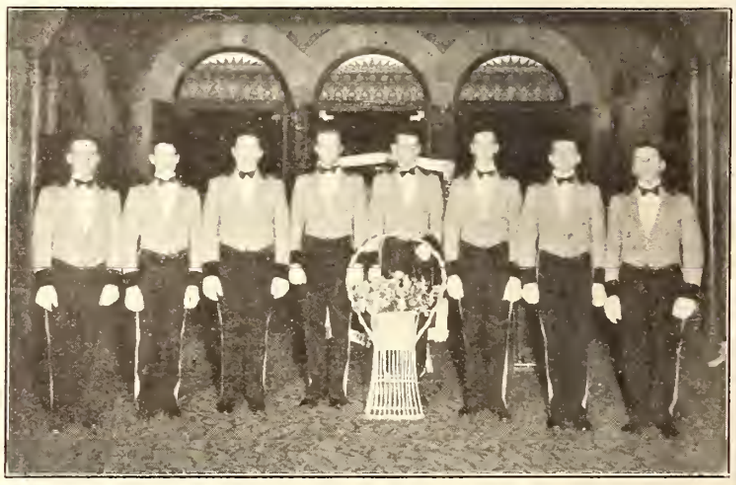
With Hamilton selling them as usual up in Norwich, we hope that he'll keep us posted on his future activities, too, so that we can pass them along to the rest of the Club.

R. Stonebrook Had A Variety Of Stunts To Plug "Cimarron"

Evidently realizing that in "Cimarron" he had something that he could put over many stunts, Rollin Stonebrook, manager of the Publix Paramount Theatre in Asbury Park, N. J., took advantage of it.

Two weeks prior to opening, he ran a special trailer on "CIMARRON," selling it as a very big and very important attraction. The trailer included excerpts from a number of excellent New York reviews. Announcements were made over the radio in advance of the opening. A very large and effective photographic enlargement of excerpts from New York criticims was used in the lobby several weeks in advance—along with a photographic enlargement of Richard Dix, standing at a table holding an open book, "CIMARRON."

One-inch ads were used for one full week in advance reading "New York acclaims 'CIMARRON'!" also quoting a different New York review each day. Book marks were distributed by libraries and schools ten days in advance. A display of stills was used in the public library in advance of the opening; also in book stores.



A special screening was held Friday evening prior to the Saturday morning opening. This screening was attended by teachers, ministers, newspapermen and prominent citizens. Excellent results were obtained. The leading department store in Asbury Park used a large box in the center of two of their full-page ads in which they advertised the book "CIMARRON" with a special plug for the picture, the theatre and playdate. 3,000 heralds were distributed in the smaller surrounding towns.

And these went over, not with a bang, but with two booms. Good work, Rollin, keep us posted on what else you are doing, and listen, give our regards to Bunny Bryan, Ray Puckett and our other friends in your district.

Broadway Service Is Given Patrons At The Park In Reading, Pa.

Broadway service staffs in Reading, Pa., is what the town can boast of now. Nearly every house in the town that features a service staff of boys has a well drilled group. To show you that this is so, here's a photo of the boys who take care of the Park Theatre, the Reading house managed by Eddie Lewis.

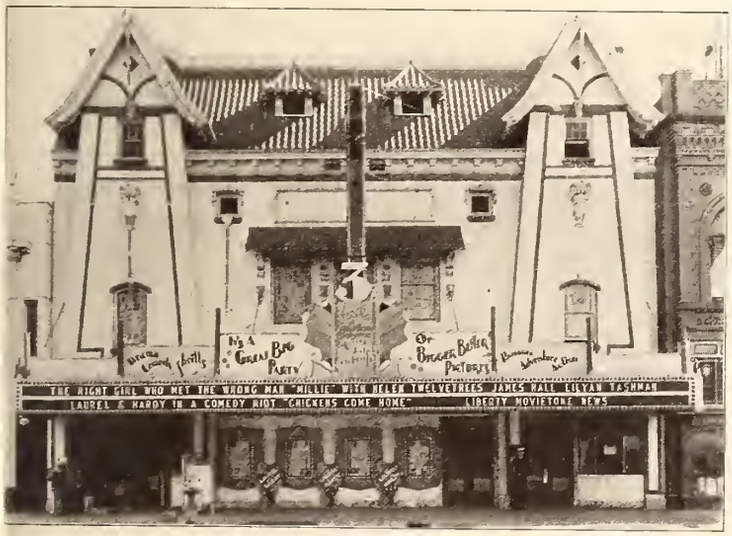
Neat looking group, eh? And they can do more than wear uniforms. Each man on the staff has been personally instructed by Eddie Lewis, who is a master on the subject, on the proper ways and means of treating patrons. The service staff is prepared for any emergency. They are all boys who like their jobs and want to get ahead in the show game.

In one of his recent talks to the boys, Lewis said: "Inasmuch as you boys are part and parcel of this institution, any inattention to your duties or any lack of interest shown, works not only against the institution, but against your own personal interest, too, and in addition jeopardizes the position of the other members of the staff. It is for the service staff to always bear in mind that the primary, the first, and really only important object is to serve the public to the best of its ability; to serve the public intelligently and with the utmost courtesy."

And so we ask you, "Ain't dat sumpin?"

Rundell Threw Paper Parachutes From Air As Stunt For Film

John C. Rundell had an air ride that proved profitable for the Kaufman Theatre in Montpelier, Ohio, recently. It was was the first time Kaufman had ever been "taken for a ride." He made the most of it.



The purpose of the air mission was to drop paper parachutes containing ads and passes to "Body and Soul," the coming attraction being plugged over 15 different towns. The services of the pilot and plane were secured for the entire day. The success of the stunt was seen in the fact that over two-thirds of the passes dropped were returned.

In addition to his regular weekly mailing list, Rundell also made up some 8,000 throwaways which were distributed to every house and business establishment in Montpelier and surrounding towns. It was an excellent and well planned move and aided immensely the success of the film. Some free newspaper publicity was obtained by stories which were run on the front pages of the local and adjacent sheets. We are glad to note that Rundell is "still in the swim" and we'd like him to know that we look forward to his future work so that we can pass it along.

Talkie Anniversary Celebrated In Style By Hill At Liberty

Anniversary Week at Frank Hill's house, the Liberty Theatre in Walla Walla, Wash., always means that activity a-plenty is going to be on display. That's the reason why we haven't Frank's complete campaign right now, but the material we have on hand we are passing along.

To get the week started off, Frank reprinted in red his first newspaper ad on the initial picture playing for the week. The picture was "Millie," and since Millie—as you all know—is redheaded, Frank had the heralds printed in a flaming red. They more than attracted the eye when distributed about town and from house to house. Incidentally, Frank says that he finds it profitable to first have the ad set up as a newspaper ad and then, if he wants heralds, to take the form over to the newspaper's job department, thus eliminating any composition work on the part of that department. He states that quite a bit of money can be saved yearly in this manner. He's right, too.

And now take a look at the birthday dress that the house sported. Some dress, and some house. Huh! If you'll look closely, you'll see that Frank, in line with his policy, gives his shorts an excellent plug. Three cut-outs and an easel on Laurel and Hardy are on display. He knows value in shorts, does Frank, and when he gets anything that he knows will click with the public he doesn't hesitate to make use of the product. The rest of the front also conveys an idea of Frank's showmanship. See how cleverly he has made it up. It's not too flashy, either. Even his copy is excellent that runs across the marquee. Is it any wonder that his party was a success? And we'll tell you some more about it when we get some later material. But, oh, yes! We must tell you that every day the patrons were given a treat in the form of coffee, candy and cakes. Let us tell you that it more than made a hit with the patrons. And it was the sort of hit that is going to help the box-office in the future, too.

Injecting Local Slants!

Recently some unusually fine examples of newspaper advertising has been received at Club headquarters, especially those ads carrying a local slant. Showmen of wide experience well know the value of local appeal into any of their activities, chiefly the newspaper advertising, therefore those who have never given this idea any particular thought would do well to profit by the experience of their brother-members.

Securing indorsements for certain pictures from various ladies' organizations, church leaders, civic authorities, etc., also represent good material for your advertising. If they have something real good to say about your attraction, quote them (with their permission, of course).

Another slant along the lines of local appeal is the use of the town's name in your scare heads. "Fresco Goes Wild Over ————," "Middletown Is Still Laughing at ————," "The Production That Norwich Has Been waiting For!" All these are just suggestions, but they have clicked for many a theatre. Why not try it yourself once in a while.

Another good angle, but one which must be reserved for only certain pictures, and then they must be well worth the tribute, is the personal endorsement of the manager. We have reproduced many along those lines, and if your opinion stand for anything in your community you might try it on the next attraction that needs such plugging.

Whichever way you inject local slants into your theatre's advertising and other activities, you may rest assured that it will be good dope.

Crying Towels Aided Phillips In Selling Of Comedy Attraction

The tears on the faces of Chattanoogans recently were not there because of depression, but because they laughed so hard at the gag Ralph Phillips used to sell "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" at the State Theatre in the Tennessee City.

In every billiard parlor, washroom and in the schools Phillips placed paper towels imprinted with copy: "This Is a Crying Towel, for You'll Laugh Until You Cry When You See This Hilarious Fun Farce (picture, playdates, theatre). They certainly made a big hit.

Not so long ago Phillips had a stunt in the local newspaper that went over to excellent result. He was playing at the time "It Pays to Advertise," and as a special stunt he promoted a bunch of co-operative ads in the local newspaper. The ad was headed with the title of the picture. The picture was also carried again in the center of the large ad, which was almost a full page in size. Eleven boxed ads were carried and in each box nothing was placed but the slogan of a Chattanooga firm and the name and address space of the merchants. These spaces were to be filled in by the participants in the contest. The gag went over to marvelous results and showed Phillips that a tremendous reader interest is taken in the paper.

Every once in a while, perhaps twice a month, Phillips gives out student tickets as a good-will boost. The tickets admit students to the house at a reduced rate and are more than appreciated by the school attendants. Oke, Ralph! We are glad to note that you are still selling them with your showmanship in Chattanooga, and we hope that we'll see some more of your work so that we can pass it along. Oke?

Johnny Jones Gets Free Space In His Local Papers Often

Acting upon a suggestion set forth in his circuit manual, Johnny Jones, manager of the Saenger Theatre in Pensacola, Fla., managed to grab off a bit of newspaper publicity for his house that proved of value.

A 2-column x 6-inch cut of Powell appeared in the paper; this cut showing Powell in his heyday when he was just a struggling young player in a small town stock company.

Copy underneath the picture (3 inches deep) set forth information about the picture and how one could win guest tickets to see the picture by identifying this present popular screen star. The story went on to say that he was suave, debonair, a faultless dresser, his sophisticated air of non-chalance dominates any group with which he may be thrown and that Kay Francis appeared with him in his last picture.

Three awards were given. The main feature of this contest was the amount of space received in the newspaper at no cost to the theatre. Listen, Johnny, we'd like to hear some more from you, as we understand you're doing some good work down in Pensacola. What do you say about keeping us posted?

Memory Memoranda Excellent Reference Aid To Sell Features

"Managers' Memory Memoranda" is the title bestowed upon this latest contribution from Sidney Smith, manager of the American Theatre in Pittston, Pa. And we think that if you'll take time enough weekly to prepare and fill out a sheet such as we are showing you'll find it more than an aid to you in your buying, booking and selling of pictures.

The cut we are showing was made from a typewritten sheet, but if you think you can spare the price, it would be well for you to have printed a number of pads, and so eliminate loss of time in typing out the various items on each new show. The cast of the picture is clipped from the press book and pasted on the memoranda sheet.

SPECIAL COMMENT

(reverse side for trade reviews-others)

That this stunt is valuable goes without saying. We won't say anything more about the gag right now, except to tell you that it has done immeasurable good to Smith and the products he plays at his house. Figure it out: a tabulation of highlights and weak spots in a picture; the reception accorded a star; the reception accorded a story; the type of story best suited for the house; minor players who made hits. What more can you ask for? You've got a handbook of advertising points right at your fingertips.

STEIN'S HOOSIERGRAM!

Out in the Indiana division of Warner Theatres, Lawrence Stein has a "meaty" little division organ called "The Hoosiergram," and through which he calls attention to many items of interest in that group of theatres.

Among the topics discussed in this fine little mimeographed newsette are Exploitation, institutional material, special campaigns, personalities, publicity and circuit gossip.

There is something intimate about this little division paper, both in make-up and style, and we feel certain that every manager in the outfit looks forward to it each week.

The division takes in the following houses: Jefferson, Goshen; Hoosier, Whiting; Parthenon & Orpheum, Hammond; Warner & Bucklen, Elkhart, and Indiana & American, Indiana Harbor.

We'd like to broadcast some of the manager's activities in this W. B. division and maybe Stein will undertake to send us the necessary dope. What do you say, Larry?

Conery Inaugurated "Family Night" As A Plug For "Lincoln"

The first "family night" at the Kingston Theatre, Kingston, Pa., was inaugurated recently by Mitchell Conery, manager of the house, to help put "Abraham Lincoln" across.

The West Side Women's Club of the city was appealed to and they in turn co-operated in making the first "family night" a real get-together. The ladies secured much advertising for the theatre that would have been otherwise impossible to get through other sources.

Announcement about the picture was made to the Women's Club, in every school, to all Boy Scouts and all Camp Fire Girls. These announcements were all made possible through the aid of members of the Women's Club. With many members of the Club in evidence on opening night of the picture, it gave the theatre the real "Family Night" appearance.

It will probably be repeated many times in the future. And just to show you that Conery is still displaying the same activity that he showed when down South, here's how he got in a fine plug on "Reducing" by means of a lobby display.

Two dummy figures were borrowed from a dressmaking shop. One figure was stuffed to resemble a very fat woman and then being attired in women's clothes. The other figure was taken apart so that only a narrow rod stood up and this represented a thin woman. On the big fat figure was attached the head of Marie Dressler cut out from the one-sheet. On the slim figure was a cut-out head of Polly Moran.

The head cut-outs were from the one-sheet and were drawn in a very funny cartoon manner. The figures were then placed facing each other and a lettered card placed between read, "Polly Moran laughs herself thin at Marie Dressler in 'Reducing'. You'll laugh, too. Here Wednesday and Thursday." An added novelty stunt was the placing of a pair of scales in the lobby. A card on the scales stated that a free admission would be given to all ladies weighing over 170 pounds. A few took advantage of weighing themselves and many just took notice.

SMITH'S AD CAMPAIGN!

Credit this beautiful ad campaign to Pete Smith, publicity impresario for M-G-M at Culver City and used to excellent returns for the coast premiere of "The Secret Six." The six smaller ads of white letters on black background started the campaign off with a great teaser plug. We leave it to your imagination as to the effectiveness of such teaser copy. After this preliminary start the balance of the ads followed, all tending to build up interest in the picture.

Regardless of local handicaps any smart showman can build up a similar campaign for this attraction by following the idea created by Pete. If you cannot secure mats of these ads from your exchange, try dropping a line direct to Smith at the M-G-M Studios on the coast. If that fails, take the text and duplicate the stars as near as possible.

In reproducing this layout the halftone failed to bring out some of the smaller type sharp enough to read. In some of the ads the use of an ordinary magnifying glass is suggested. Otherwise we will furnish the text not readable to those requesting same.

We are trying to inject sufficient novelty into these various layouts of newspaper ads to make them really worth-while to showmen everywhere. You will note that some weeks we emphasize small town copy and at other times an assortment of all styles. Our purpose in handling ad reproductions in this manner is to give the widest variety possible in the space we allot for this kind of material.

After showing so many of the regular ad layouts, this one ought to prove interesting to the followers of the Club pages. No one will deny that it is different as well as outstanding. We hope to be able to pass along some more of the novel ad campaigns from Pete Smith's workshop.

Now Try "Twin Nites"

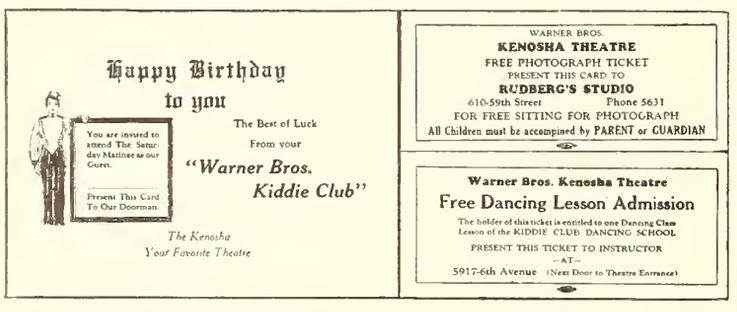
One of the most successful community stunts ever called to our attention was "Twin Nite." This particular gag is a combination of about a half dozen other business promotion ideas all rolled into one.

Those of you who keep a file of these publications will find a complete resume of a "Twin Nite" affair on page 1154 in the issue of Sept. 28th, 1929 (Motion Picture News).

Briefly, the idea is to encourage every pair of twins, regardless of age, to enter into the spirit of the "Twin Nite." Give it plenty of attention from the standpoint of advertising and publicity. Tie the local paper into the affair in one way or another.

Those of the twins who can entertain should be played up. Try to get some of the merchants to dress up a few pair of the twins. Offer sufficient inducements to insure a good sized enrollment. Whether your community has a half dozen or half hundred pairs of 'em, you should not be satisfied until they are all lined up for the big night.

As a box office bet you will find few stunts to equal this one. The very idea of the gag is enough to create interest in the entire community. Surrounded with the right kind of publicity this should hang them from the rafters the night or nights, it breaks.



Janecky's Kid Klub In Kenosha, Wis., Is A Valuable Feature

2,500 kids in 21 weeks!

That's the record held by Harold Janecky, manager of the Warners' Kenosha Theatre, Wis., and established when he started his kiddie klub. And what a sensation is this klub in Kenosha and the surrounding territories. The kids are practically crazy about the Club, and it is seldom that one out of the entire 2,500 enrollment will miss a meeting. They cram into the theatre on Saturday afternoons and have one wild time. The house is theirs and they make the most of it.

And Janecky, too, makes the most of the kiddie klub. He knows that it can be an invaluable asset in obtaining and holding the good-will of the citizens of the town. Through a nationally known mail order house, he recently promoted a load of marbles, and staged a marble shooting contest that delighted the heart of every kid. Special teams were designated and playoffs held every Saturday morning. Those kids clicking through to the finals were given sporting goods as awards of merit. The last of May, Janecky plans to stage his big kiddie revue, which will be held at the theatre, and in which over 50 of the most talented kids will take part. This, we say now, will bowl 'em over! The photo we are showing was a very large one. But it couldn't get in all of the kids that were on hand the day the kids held their Saturday party and saw "City Lights." What an affair.

And talking about "City Lights." It got a great campaign at Janecky's hands in Kenosha. One of the most effective of the exploitation stunts was having two girls in the window of a local store, call up residents of the town, in full view of passersby, and tell them that the Chaplin opus was on view at the local playhouse. The windows were lettered with copy on the picture. The gag created lots of attention and comment. We are showing here, the front for the picture. Look it over and see if there isn't a point or you'd like to use should you be planning to play the picture.

Now about those tickets we are showing. They represent a few of Janecky's many activities on the kiddie klub program. There's a birthday card; a card for a free dancing lesson; and a card for a free photograph. Janecky has contacted numerous merchants in the town and obtained from them these special features for the kids. The merchants are always more than willing to co-operate with him.

And, oh yes! Before we sign off on this little story we'd like to tell you that the showman gave Kenosha a great treat not so long ago in the form of a stage wedding, that was more than a wedding; it was an event! And how the theatre was packed the night of the occasion! The day of the wedding, Janecky made a corking last-minute move by distributing heralds announcing the wedding to be held the same night.

Janecky is displaying some fine showmanship out in Kenosha; he most assuredly rates a compliment on the splendid manner in which he has made his kiddie klub one of the biggest and most active in the state. Should you wish to correspond with him about it, desiring information on any angle of kiddie klub building activity, we think that if you'll drop him a line at the theatre, he'll give you the desired information. Right, Harold?

Newspaper Break Was Obtained By T. Kane From Realty Dealer

Just another racket, was what we might characterize Tom Kane's penchant for grabbing space for the house he manages, the Sequoia Theatre in Redwood City, Cal.

Not so long ago, Tom was talking to Charley Holt, one of the biggest of the real estate operators on the Peninsula for years, and in the course of the conversation they spoke about kid business. Then Tom shifted it over to ask why Charley hadn't been pulling some fast ones as in former days and giving the buyers of real estate an opportunity to make some dough. Tom inquired: "Charley, why don't you tell the people about those sleepers like you used to?" Holt replied to the effect that things weren't like they used to be, but if he came across one in the near future he'd take a chance. Well, it happened. And Holt told the folks by means of an ad that during his conversation with Kane the subject had been mentioned.

To make a short story still shorter, Holt stated that he had lots for sale, 18 of them. And the climax is this: 18 lots were sold, as a result of the ad. Holt got the dough; Tom got the publicity as the ad was a big one; and the persons purchasing the lots were satisfied. What more can you ask for?

P. S.—A "sleeper" is something of immense value lying around under your nose that nobody wants, but when discovered, everybody wants it.

Get Well Pat!

We're wishing P. A. McGuire a mighty speedy recovery from his recent operation. "P. A." happens to be advertising manager for the International Projector Corp., and the daddy of Better Projection.

His efforts on behalf of the projectionists are well known from coast to coast and as the leading light of the Projection Advisory Council he has had to put in many extra licks of work to get things moving.

His many friends will be delighted to know that McGuire is rapidly recovering his health and will be back at his desk in about two weeks.

Hiehle's Style Show Was Success; Scenes Were Very Effective

Ed Hiehle staged a Fashion Model Contest before he produced his Spring Fashion Revue. And make believe that it didn't help Ed to grab off a flock of advance publicity. The girls, six in number, were selected from their photographs, the photos being obtained through a tie-up with a local photographer.

And the show itself at the Midland Theatre in Newark, Ohio. Great! The six winners of the Model Contest were used as mannequins to model, while 20 others were chosen as atmospheric background for the scene which was laid in a Paris Fashion Salon.

A local fashion shop provided the garments worn; the shoe store, the footwear; a florist, flowers; and a furniture store, the complete stage setting. An orchestra, concealed behind palms, purveyed music from the stage. The stores paid for the advertising and we are showing a bunch of it here so that you can look it over and see how the ads broke in the papers. The show—as would be expected—was a wow and the object of considerable applause from the audience, and when the curtain opened on the Parish Fashion Salon, the ovation was tremendous.

Hiehle went after this show with a will. That he would click was assured. You, too, can make as interesting a show. Unless you've already done so, and if such be the case, you are doubtless smiling over the accrued and additional receipts. Ed is. Right?

There are merchants in your locality who are waiting for you to approach them with the idea of staging a fashion show. If you have not already made their acquaintance, go meet them at the very first opportunity that presents itself. It's a sure-fire proposition that will get their attention. And, maybe, there's a very good designer in your town who would like to get in on the show.

Atmospheric Front Designed For 'Rango' By Weiss And Claar

It's too bad we haven't a photo at this time to pass along, but maybe Harry Weiss will dig one up and pass it along to us, so that we can show you how Weiss and the house manager of the Fairfax Theatre in Miami, Fla., Jake Claar, sold "Rango" by means of one of the most novel atmospheric fronts that ever hit the city.

Cut-out letters spelling out the title of the picture were spaced to cover the full length of the marquee. These letters reached from the marquee down to the street curb and were a bright red with a black outline. This idea was conceived by Jacob Claar, the house manager. Manager Harry Weiss also had a most interesting jungle display in the lobby to add the proper atmosphere to the picture. The lobby was made up to represent a jungle; it included stuffed animals, wild cats and snakes and alligators. The lobby was filled with palmetto leaves, trees, vines, logs and other things to give it the appearance of a jungle.

Let's Get Acquainted!

With summer vacations just around the corner many of our members will be coming to New York for a visit. We hope they will make it a point to come in and see us at Club headquarters so we may become personally acquainted with them.

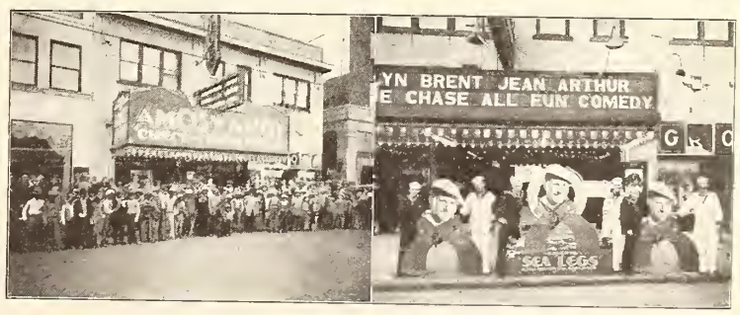
The office is located at 1790 Broadway, corner 58th Street, New York, and if there is anything we can do for the visiting members while they are in New York we hope they will not hesitate to make their wishes known.

Arrangements were made last summer whereby quite a few of the out-of-town managers visited the outstanding theatres on Times Square and all of them enjoyed these inspections tremendously. Just give us time enough to make the necessary arrangements and we'll see that you are taken care of.

Those who are not certain of where they will stop can have their mail addressed care of Club headquarters where office facilities will be at their command. If you want hotel reservations just drop us a line and let us know what you want. Several hotels offer special rates for Club members if arrangements are made through this office.

"CHICK"

The front of the lobby was done in palmetto leaves with large cut-out letters done in silver metallics with a lot of snappy lines. The box-office also was made over to resemble a grass hut. One of the ballyhoos used by Weiss was that of a monkey riding a tricycle all around town. A sign on the monkey's back played up the picture, theatre and playdates.



How about that photo, Harry, and a description of the color scheme so that we can pass it along?

Coleman Handles The Publicity For Five Houses In Oklahoma

They say that out in Oklahoma City, Okla., there's a showman who keeps the town looking at his work. His name is E. B. Coleman, and he's handling city-wide publicity for the Cooper-Publix houses in Oklahoma City.

He works on the theory that all pictures should be properly publicized, be they of good b. o. repute or poor. He keeps his five houses before the public eye continually, practicing what he preaches. Radio has furnished him with a novel stunt, and for 15 minutes a day on three of the city's broadcasting stations he presents a musical program following which an announcement is made of the shows at the local houses.

During the showing of "Check and Double Check," Coleman had advertising tie-ups with more than 100 city merchants and received in excess of 1,000 lines of free newspaper space. To accomplish this stunt, he sponsored an Amos 'n' Andy contest, offering awards to the kids making up most realistically. What a hit it made with the youngsters! Five hundred kids, all blacked up, parade down the street with police escort. We're showing a photo of some of the kids.

Alongside this photo can be seen one for the work turned out on "Sea Legs." Here a novel street ballyhoo was adopted in the form of cut-outs of the star in costume. Boys dressed in naval uniforms carried the cut-outs about town, giving to the picture a valuable plug. Incidentally, Coleman is responsible for the first 48 sheets used in Oklahoma City. They plugged Trader Horn. With so progressive a showman as Coleman working out in Oklahoma City, we have an idea that he should be represented often on our pages, and we hope to hear from him soon. What do you say, "E. B."?

Forhan Liked Short Subjects Issue, And Makes Suggestions

Well, well! Here's Tom Forhan again and he's got some corking comments to pass along to us. Tom, many of the showmen know, is the manager of the Capitol Theatre in Welland, Ontario, Can.

He liked our recent short subject issue a lot, and he doesn't hesitate to say so in these words:

"You hit the nail on the head about shorts, but you could have gone further and called the boys' attention to the many fine opportunities that every issue of the Motion Picture Herald has in illustrations that can be clipped, sent to the engravers and excellent cut material secured that will illustrate display and other advertising matter. The March 14 issue of the Herald contains matter that can be converted to good use for Mickey Mouse, Krazy Kat, Curiosities, Silly Symphonies, and many others. Naturally, I am speaking about houses in smaller cities that have not the facilities for getting out the work such as larger cities do.

"On one page of the Herald, a Universal 24-sheet illustration contains material on Ruth, Sidney and Murray, Oswald, Hamilton, Pollard and McNamee, from which I have had cuts made for advertising shorts, also metal cut-outs for use on marquee and lobby. I have found that the use of small cuts plugging shorts secure for me much better results than do the old style of simply mentioning the title of the short and letting it go at that. Page 76 of the March 14 issue contains 14 names of well known stars appearing in shorts that do not take up much space in an ad, and that still plugs a short much better than the old ways of advertising shorts." (Editor's note.—We believe Mr. Forhan refers to the idea now prevalent of placing a group of stars in a theatre ad with a heading, "Shortly to Appear (Stars) in comedies, dramatic sketches, etc.)

Oke, Tom. And we're always glad to hear your views on any subject. We hope to hear from you again, and we want to take this occasion to invite others also to pass along their slant, too.

Multistamp Heralds Used To Ace Results By Hart In Edgemont

M. L. Hart gets along pretty well with the natives living in and around the vicinity of Edgemont, S. Dak. We might go still further than this and say that he more than gets along with them, since the patrons are not backward about telling him what they thing of his pictures and his exploitation methods.

This is evident in the herald we are showing. Here is a medium that Hart uses which costs him very little money. He makes them up with a Multistamp, printing them on any kind of cheap stock. He never buys heralds. This stunt of his goes over too well. He tells us that the natives all watch for the heralds to see what fool stunt he is going to pull next.

But he got back on them recently, and more than that, he got in a plug for the picture he was playing at the time. It seems that they were featuring a depositors' meeting in town, the purpose of which was a post mortem held over a busted bank. Hart appeared on the scene with a thousand or so heralds. The copy on the heralds read: "You Can BANK on this: Joe E. Brown in TOP SPEED will give you CAPITAL entertainment and hold your INTEREST from start to finish." The words "bank," "capital" and "interest," being in big letters, you may be sure that the depositors all grabbed for them. It is not reported what they said after reading them.

Oke, "M. L."! We'd like to hear what else you are doing out in your shack whar them thar mountains kiss the skies. And listen! How about sending in a photo of yourself so that we can give you a regular introduction?

Something New in a Theatre Ad!

We can well imagine how this ad looked on the pages of the Atlanta newspaper where it was used. And you can probably imagine it, too. Do you agree that it is unusual? No question about that.

Not so very long ago we carried an interesting yarn from a showman up New England way who took regulation production stills and by the clever addition of a small box or two made them up into outstanding advertising copy for his newspaper.

If your theatre is located in a spot where such stuff can be used, we can heartily recommend it. It will pull your house's advertising out of the rut and give it a decidedly different twist. That alone ought to be an inducement to those showmen who are always so anxious to inject something new and novel into their theatre's advertising.

Carter Barron (so we've been told) is the man responsible for this fine ad which ran five columns by five and one-half inches deep. It lends itself admirably to reduction for much smaller sizes as well.

May we suggest that you try this idea just once? But be sure and select a still from the production you are selling that will work out well for such an idea. It should have one or two good spots for mortising where you can carry your type copy or sig. cut.

Goodwin Showed His Local Merchants Why It Pays To Advertise

"Certainly it pays to advertise," was what Jack Goodwin, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Scranton, Pa., told the local merchants who were reluctant about entering into a proposition for a co-operative page to plug "It Pays to Advertise" when it played the Publix house.

But Jack held his ground, and the result was not one page of co-operative ads, but two. And if you happen to know anything about Scranton you'll understand that for over a year and a half a double-truck page hadn't been promoted. So Goodwin achieved what looked like the impossible. He pulled a very smart move after the page broke on the opening day, too. He had the double truck ad mounted on a 33 inch by 60 inch art panel and placed on display in front of the theatre. A sign stated, "THESE SCRANTON MERCHANTS SAY: (on top). READ THE ABOVE ADVERTISEMENTS—CAREFULLY —MANY GREAT VALUES AWAIT YOU (at bottom. This made a big hit with the merchants. Incidentally, Goodwin ran a preview of the picture for the merchants and the advertising staff of the paper before he got the ad. Which may have helped. Another excellent move was the presentation to the merchants of two complimentary tickets.

And now here's another little stunt that perhaps you'd like to interest your local merchant or merchants on. The copy tells the story rather completely. The theatre's attraction is tied-in on the bottom of the throwaway. As can be seen, the throwaways, which measure 5½ by 3½ inches, printed in black on white stock, are inserted in packages leaving the store of the dealers. Goodwin supplies the heralds, 10,000 of which are used weekly, and they cost him but little.

If you think that you can use this gag, it will no doubt help get you some extra publicity weekly. Give it a little consideration, and if you can use it, take it with Goodwin's compliments. Thanks, Jack.

Binstock, Plugging Special Week, Did Some Excellent Work

Paul Binstock rated space recently in the editorial columns of the Queen's County Section of the New York Evening Journal; and the reason Paul received the space in the ace evening paper is hereby revealed.

As every showman is aware, the week of April 4th to 10th was set aside as Players and Patrons Jubilee Week, which week really was the annual N.V.A. week. Binstock, who manages the Fox Astoria Grand Theatre in Astoria, Long Island, N. Y., decided to make a personal visit to the office of the Borough President and secure from him an official proclamation setting the week aside as "Players and Patrons Jubilee Week," officially recognized by Queens.

Well, to make the story short, Binstock visited the office of the Borough President. A photographer from the newspaper was on hand to take a picture showing Binstock in the act of receiving the authentic proclamation from the hands of the Borough President. This picture landed in the editorial columns, together with quite a story. The article was headed off: "Next Week In Queens—Attend The Theatre."

And so Paul not only grabbed off some publicity for himself, but as well secured publicity for the meritorious drive reigning at the time to help the needy actors and actresses of the show profession.

Underbaked or Overbaked!

We picked up the following some time ago, but cannot recall who wrote it: "It is just as harmful to take the loaf of bread out of the oven half baked as it is to let it stay in too long and be overdone."

So before you can up and ask us what bread has to do with theatres, we'll hustle to tell you why we started this little story.

How many times have you started a great exploitation and advertising campaign and then let up on it too soon, or curtailed the entire campaign before it was completed? Then again, how often have you started on advertising some great big picture and kept at it until you had actually overdone it? One is just as bad as the other if viewed from the angle of good showmanship.

In planning an advertising campaign of any kind, every possible point should be carefully watched and covered, but with the thought always in mind that you must be careful to go through with it and at the same time not plug it until it becomes tiresome. Take any average town or city which boasts of one or two good newspapers and you will most generally find that a short (week to ten days) but snappy, well-thoughtout plan will stir up all the interest that you require to put over a picture. Trying to work up such interest by a series of teaser ads two or three weeks ahead, then the actual campaign following is apt to dull the interest that you have created in what you are selling.

"Reaching For Moon" Given Ace Plug By Slee In Allentown

When "Reaching for the Moon" played the Colonial Theatre in Allentown, Pa., you might easily have been sure that Warren A. Slee, manager of the theatre, would give the film an excellent campaign, as is his custom to do on all pictures he puts over in his town.

Well, Slee's campaign came up to expectations. In fact, we can even say that it more than came up to expectations, especially in view of the highlights that were displayed. These highlights about which we are talking were the act window displays obtained around town. A tie-up with the telephone company was productive of a cut-out of Fairbanks, holding a French phone, which was placed on display in the company's windows along with a number of French phones.

Then Slee secured a window display break in one of the leading jewelry stores in the town. A special array of jewelry was attractively grouped about a still of the stars in the picture. We are showing this display here. You will also note another display obtained in the window of a sporting good's store, long a fertile field for the athletic Fairbanks, whose prowess at all sports is well known by fans and players alike. The dealer was more than willing to arrange an attractive cut-out in the window and build a display of sports goods about it. You can be sure that these displays did lots to have the town talking about the picture. Slee, being well acquainted with his town, wisely figured that window displays would prove one of the most powerful sales methods he could devise. The results showed it. Right, Warren? Let's have some more, and give our regards to our friends in your town and the surrounding spots, too. Oke?

"SHOWMANSHIP—15 YEARS AGO!" Will Be Resumed Next Week

What! No Cartoons?

Murray Lafayette, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Norwich, Conn., tells us that his town is strong for shorts. Here's a sample:

A woman patron gives the phone a buzz: "Warners' Broadway?"

"Yes, Mam."

"Whatyure playin' today?"

"'Millie,' written by Donald Henderson Clark, has so and so, etc."

"What else?"

"A comedy, a novelty, News, etc."

"Whoozin your acts?"

"Why, 'er, we have a short called 'Stars of Yesterday,' Benny Rubin in 'Talking Turkey,' a band act 'Hittin' the High C,' etc."

"What! No cartoon?"

"No." And bang goes the receiver.

Old Stage Coach Was Recalled To Play A Part In Showselling

On the byways and the highways leading into the streets of Austin, Texas, as well as on Austin's streets, the theatregoers were acquainted with the fact that "The Conquering Horde" was to play the Publix-Queen Theatre, the house managed by G. L. Higgins. And how did the people learn this? Through a stunt that Higgins, with the aid of an old stage coach, put across.

The film was brought into town on the stage coach Saturday afternoon before picture's Sunday opening. The coach was driven by an old cattle driver and was bannered on both sides with copy: "We are transferring the famous film, 'Conquering Horde,' to the Queen Theatre—Austin."

The film was received by the Adjutant General of the Texas Rangers and one of the local papers took photos of the film's arrival, which later appeared with a feature story on the stunt.

The publicity more than helped the show. This is Mr. Higgins' first contribution to the Round Table pages, and we hope that since he is so active, he will continue passing along his work. And you might also include your photo, "G. L."

Granby Theatre In Norfolk, Va., Still Getting Free Space

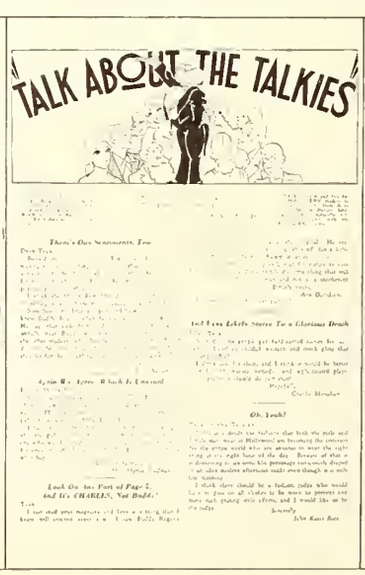
We've shown one or two of these layouts before, but in the event that some of our readers may have missed them we are passing the gag along again so that should the occasion arise when you might want to make a tie-up of the sort, you'll have something on hand with which to work, and plan out the way you'd lay out a page.

This ad, secured in conjunction with the Portsmouth, Va., Star, is the product of the showman handling the Granby Theatre (in Norfolk, we believe). You can see that by the judicious cutting up of scene mats the showman has achieved an effect that is bound to strike the eye. The purpose of the ad is, of course, to help secure subscriptions for the newspaper. For every six month's subscription received by the paper, the sheet gives to the new subscriber a ticket good for six admissions to the Granby. The showman supplies the passes and in return receives a full page of publicity. Is that a fair exchange? And who'll say no?

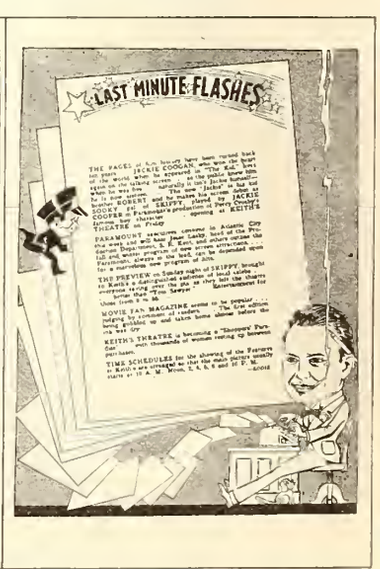
And now to get back to the ad layout again. You'll notice that the showman makes sure to plug his shorts on the page. In this case the short is a serial, and it receives mention not once, but twice. Which, again you'll agree, is plugging the shorts with a will. Also included in the ad is a plug for theatre parties. Perhaps your local editor right now is willing to pull a gag like this. In fact, he might have been looking for a circulation building stunt for some time. Why not give him a chance to consider the gag? It should prove a winner for all parties concerned.

Corcoran's Fine Movie Magazine

Just a short time ago we told you about the grand movie magazine being turned out by Ed. Corcoran and Jerry Crowley for the Keith's Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa. Now we want you to take a look at the front cover and three of its interesting inside pages. Take our word for it, the balance of this magazine is just as chockful of meaty reading matter as the few pages we are reproducing.



We have come across few house organs, programs, or whatever else you want to call 'em, to compare with this one. And it again proves what real showmen can accomplish when they set out to do something out of the ordinary. What do you say, brother members; don't you agree with us?



Other outstanding examples of theatre programs and magazines will be used from time to time because we firmly believe, and know that thousands of the boys in the field agree with us, that there are few better mediums within the reach of a theatre for patron appeal and direct show-selling than stuff of this kind.

We are very grateful to the boys handling this newsy booklet for their thoughtfulness in putting us on their mailing list.

Automotive Relic Of Halcyon Days Aided End In Selling Show

Scrantonians are still trying to figure out how on earth the old relic we are showing in the photo managed, under its own motive power, to chug along Main Street. And in their immediate cogitations they remember "East Lynne," which many of them saw when it played the Riviera Theatre. And they saw it because on the car, John C. End, manager of the Publix house, advertised the picture by means of banners.

A tie-up with the Conrad Motor Co. resulted in their loaning a 1903 model Pierce Arrow car. This car was parked in the business section each day for one week with copy on banners appropriate to the "days of East Lynn." One of the banners read, "This car is the type used when 'East Lynne' was a popular play."

Crowds flocked about the hackneyed relic of halcyon days every moment it was on the streets. It gave the town something to talk about, and an observer was deluged with wisecracks and comments about the car. The car proved to be one of the highlights of End's campaign, giving the b. o. some extra dough. We'd like to hear some more from Mr. End regarding his work, as we number quite a few Round Table members in Scranton. How about your photo, with your next contribution, Mr. End?

M. H. Wilheit Joins; He Sells Shows In Canal Zone, Panama

As his first contribution to the Club pages since joining us, M. H. Wilheit, manager of the Strand Theatre in Colon, R. P. Canal Zone passes along an atmospheric front that he used to sell "Tom Sawyer."

Though the photo from which the cut was made happened to be rather blurred, we think you'll be able to make out the main points of the displays. Compboard fences were erected, showing Tom Sawyer painting on one, and on the other a cut of Huck Finn, looking over at Tom's direction. The copy on the boards said "Me'n Huck Finn Wants to See You Sunday and Monday" and was signed by Tom Sawyer. One side of the fence has the copy written in English. The other side flashed copy in Spanish, this to capture the Spanish trade that is rather numerous.

Other stunts on Wilheit's campaign included special teaser ad slugs which were scattered in the newspapers a week before opening date.. In addition to this gag, Wilheit also tied-up the local high schools and offered free tickets for the best work turned out on American literature, especially that of Mark Twain. The stunt went over very well with the students and served to give the picture a good send-off.

Wilheit, we understand, is trying to keep right abreast of the States' showmen with his show-selling. And just by looking over this much of his work, we think that he's managing to do it pretty well. We hope that he'll pass along some more.

SELL THE ORGANIST!

By Teddy McDonald

Crossing the country to Hollywood I stopped in a number of small theatres. One thing struck me very forcibly—the utter disregard for music. True enough we can't install big organs in most cases, but we can get and we do have small organs in theatres that are at the present time in disuse. They are to my mind an overhead.

In the days of the silent pictures, the studio made a $500,000 motion picture, projected it in a $1,000,000 theatre and supplied musical accomplishment on a $25,000 theatre organ. That is no more. In this modern day the organ is classed as a separate program in itself. If you have an organ, use it. Get an organist that has a bit of pep and personality. Put him in the spotlight and tell him "to go the limit." Then watch the results.

Many theatres go outside and hire a big-time organist. He arives in town riding on the crest of a big wave of publicity. With banners and press agents shouting his praise he plays to the public. The showmen who have these organists hold them only for a while and after the cream is all off the manager looks around for the small organist to take his place. This is wrong. Get the small organist and play him up to the limit.

Be sure of one thing: see that your organist works with you. Cooperation is the main thing. Get the organist to go over with you the details of his new program and tell him to give you suggestions so that you will be able to work with him on all the details. It is perfectly true that a good organist playing a good organ can do a great deal more for a theatre than an orchestra.

Formerly I gave a short message on "REHEARSE THE SHOW," this now also includes the "Organ Rehearsal." One of the most important things in an organ solo is the proper projection of the slides. The operator may be late or early on the slide and ruin the whole stunt in the one error. A careful rehearsal of each solo to be presented is necessary in order that the organist and the operator should be better acquainted with the words and music.

The best "spot" on the program for a solo or novelty is following your rest period, where the organ has been silent for a long time. Then when you play, the audience is in a better mood for it. The thing to do about the organist situation is to hire intelligent persons who happen to be musicians instead of hiring musicians who may or may not happen to be intelligent. If you have a personality at the organ, a fellow who can smile and really laugh (not the "Stage Laugh"), you can make a mint of money by exploiting your organist as big as the picture and make that certain personality the "TALK OF THE TOWN."

If the organist can make the patrons feel the way he plays, he is the man fit for the job and he deserves a medal.

The moral of this story is:

NO THEATRE IS COMPLETE WITHOUT AN ORGAN AND A SHOWMAN WHO KNOWS WHAT TO DO WITH IT!

Boyd's Work On 'New Moon' Helped Picture To Click At Theatre

To plug "New Moon," Alan Boyd, manager of the Lyric Theatre in Asbury Park, N. J., worked out a very advantageous stunt in his lobby that was productive of a good deal of word-of-mouth comment on the film and for the theatre.

His theatre artist prepared a 4 inch by 4 inch advance display in the inside lobby. This display was a "guessing board" on which illustrations of stars from the six-sheet were used, plus 301 drawn stars. This display attracted a great deal of attention.

Boyd also used an old gag to advantage. He distributed 2,000 small cards reading: "Test your health! Blow on the 'NEW MOON'; if it turns blue, see a doctor." (A red moon appeared here.) "If it remains red, see and hear the world's supreme artists of song, Lawrence Tibbet and Grace Moore in 'NEW MOON,' etc., etc." This stunt proved decidedly worthwhile, and also proved that a stunt, old or not, will generally click.

Delays Are Dangerous!

Now is the time to start selling your cooling plant. If you delay too long it will make it all the harder to get the idea over that YOUR theatre is a real summer resort in comfort and fresh air.

Smart showmen sell the idea gradually and subtly to their patrons. They camouflage it by coupling it up with advertisements for big coming attractions within the next month or two. But, every week or so, they get over the fact to patrons that their theatre is the finest summer resort in the world.

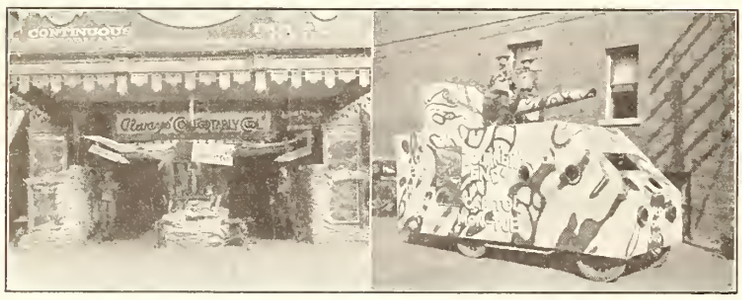
When one live-wire was asked why he started so early, his reply was: "What the devil do you want me to do, wait until the hot weather comes? Then it is too late and there are no people left to tell, whereas if I start now, when I am packing them in, by June 1st I have every one of them convinced and sold that they cannot afford to stay away from my theatre in the summer time and the only time I do lose them is when they have a two weeks' vacation and go out of town."

There's lots of good horse-sense in what the gentleman has to say. Maybe you never looked at it in just that light. So here's hoping we have created more interest through this little story.

Get Acquainted Is Al Knopp's System In Fredericksburg

Meet another showman from Texas. At this time we want to introduce you to Albert Knopp, who very efficiently handles the publicity and exploitation for the Palace Theatre in Fredericksburg, Texas.

Mr. Knopp has been in the show game, we understand, for a number of years; and so he has long since learned the value of securing an intimate knowledge of his town. In this manner he gets to know the likes and dislikes of the local theatre going public. By knowing what will best click in the town, it is only that which is used, and box-office success, in this manner, is assured.



He is well liked in his town, and this enables him to secure advantageous tie-ups with the local paper and various merchants whenever such tie-ups are thought to be necessary. The public, too, knows Knopp. Consequently he is often given little hints on their attitude towards stars that help him in the future plugging of the players. We'd hope to have some of Knopp's work to pass along in the very near future, as we are sure that it will be found both interesting and profitable reading by his fellow members and showmen in the Managers' Round Table Club. What do you say, Albert?

Fields Continues To Display His Talent In Canada Theatre

Just to show us that he is still on the go and selling his shows at the Capitol Theatre in Moose Jaw, Sas., Can., with the same pep that he has always displayed, E. P. Fields, manager of the house drops us a line or two.

Not so long ago Fields sold an idea to the local Light and Power company and secured from them an expensive Kelvinator which was given to one of the theatre's patrons. The idea of the stunt was that with every cent spent at the theare, a vote would be given. The person holding the greatest number of votes was given the electric refrigerator. 25 votes were given for a 25-cent admission; 35 for a 35-cent admission, and so on.

The Light and Power company more than advertised the stunt in the newspaper. The stunt itself created considerable comment about the town and resulted in the theatre receiving valuable publicity.

The two photos reproduced above will give you a slight idea of how E. P. Fields surrounds his pictures and front with atmosphere. The one on the left shows the attractive front he created and the other the most novel ballyhoo for outside work. Both helped put the picture over to big returns.

Oke "E. P.," we are always glad to hear from you regarding your work, because it never fails to contain something of interest. Give our regards to our many friends up in your vicinity, and remember to keep us posted on your future work.

"Costello Case" Was Given A Front Page Break By Rosenblatt

And you'd look, too, if you picked up a newspaper and read: "Police Hunt Costello, Slayer!"

It happened not so long ago when M. Rosenblatt, manager of Lloyd's Theatre in Menominee, Mich., effected a tie-up with his local newspaper and obtained the front-page headlines that we are discussing.

But just to show you how it looked, we are reproducing the entire front page in order that you may the more clearly see the highlights of the ace campaign that the showman turned out when he played Sono-Art's "The Costello Case," and to good advantage.

LLOYD'S THEATRE

It is seldom that showmen can secure such breaks as this: a front-page headline in a local newspaper, and when such a thing is achieved we take it that the showman is one who is not only well known in his town, but well liked also. We are not acquainted with Mr. Rosenblatt, so we can't tell you just how he gets along in his town. This is his first contribution to the Club pages, but we hope that it will be followed up with lots more, so that we can see what he does to keep the box-office business buzzing. What do you say, Rosenblatt, some more tips from you?

Slater's Showselling Methods Reveal His Knowledge Of Public

Bill Slater turned out a good campaign when he sold "Abraham Lincoln" at the Crescent Theatre in Perth Amboy, New Jersey, and the final result was seen in the box-office. Which is where final results should be seen, sez we.

2,000 heralds specially prepared, with selling copy suitable to school children, were distributed at the schools. A one-sheet display of stills was placed in the public library. An entire section of the library was devoted to the LINCOLN display. A one-sheet display was placed in the main assembly hall of the YMCA, and another one-sheet display in the lobby of the YMCA building, before and during the run.

Letters were written to all history teachers of public schools and high schools. A pass to the Crescent Theatre was enclosed in each letter. Teachers were invited to the Monday matinee performance. Window tie-ups were secured in furniture stores, men's clothing stores, optical stores and music stores. Abraham Lincoln was sold as a personality. This angle was emphasized rather than the historic angle.

As the box-office showed, Slater's angle on selling the picture was an excellent one. He received many comments on the show from the patrons. Keep it up, Bill, and let's hear some more from you.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES!

Roy H. Rowe

From principal of a North Carolina College to ownership of a motion picture theatre in the same state, reads Roy Rowe's history concerning the early part of his career in show business.

Previous to becoming head of Emerton College, a position he held for three years, Rowe was connected with the University of North Carolina for a term of four years. We are not quite sure whether he means that he pursued a college course at this university for four years, or whether he was there in official capacity; at any rate, we are putting it down the way he gives it to us in answer to "what business were you previously engaged in?" He is married and was born in Burgaw, N. C. Up to now he has been engaged in this business for four years. And from what we are able to glean from his letter we are sure that Rowe has determined to make a motion picture career his aim in the years to come. Four years in show business is long enough to prevent his ever returning to the educational field.

Leaving the Emerton post, as we have stated, Rowe engaged in a theatre enterprise of his own in the eastern portion of North Carolina from 1927 until 1929. He then went with Publix at Charlotte, N. C., as a student-manager in the fall of 1929. He later attended the Publix Managers' school in New York City and graduated from the class of April, 1930. He was later connected with Publix as manager of the Strand, Spartanburg, S. C.; the Imperial theatre, Greensboro, N. C., and the Palace theatre, Raleigh, N. C.

Howe is at present in charge of the Warner theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., a change of post which he considers a promotion. It is a de luxe type theatre and although the Club knows that this member will have plenty to do in the way of work, he assures us that he will find time to still contribute to Club columns.

W. E. Adams

Filial duty placed W. E. Adams in the theatre business at the early age of 14. At that period in his life he was attending school. His father owned a small theatre in Landis, N. C., and W. E.'s brother managed the house. The brother was called away and W. E. took up the work. However, in his spare time, he managed to pursue his studies and completed a high school course in Landis and China Grove schools. It was hard work and it kept him plugging many hours each day to take care of his duties at the theatre and pass his school examinations. But Adams made the grade and has never regretted the tedious routine. He is now well on the road toward a successful manager's career.

Adams is another of the younger members of the Club, having been born August 4, 1908. That makes him only twenty-three years of age, but, it also means that he has spent the past nine years in show business. Following his post as manager of the Landis theatre he took charge of the China Grove theatre, China Grove, N. C. Following this post he spent one solid year with a roadshow. Terminating this engagement, he was sent to Lincolnton, N. C., as manager of the Artcraft theatre. J. U. McCormick, of Charlotte, had just taken over the house and later added the Rivoli to his holdings. Adams was eventually placed in charge of both houses and that is where the Club finds him today.

He tells us that there isn't a thought in his mind of ever leaving show business. When he started he did not know whether it was to be his career or not. But the germ has been firmly planted for he says he likes it, and how! By this remark we take it that if he had to start all over again he'd retrace his footsteps. Oh, yes, he admits that he is married.

Maurice Sidman

Music was the stepping stone of Maurice Sidman's entry in show business, having started his career as a theatre musician after graduating from the New England Conservatory of Music. In addition to his musical education he went through all grades of high school. He has acted as owner-manager of a house and has been connected with the Harry Segal Circuit and the Triangle Theatre Corporation of New Haven, Conn.

It's a long way from Russia to New England but Sidman tells us that he hails from that far-off country and gives his date of birth as December 12, 1896. He was attracted to theatres at the age of 15 and gives no other reason for adopting his career other than that the business carried a definite appeal to his nature. In other words, just breathing the atmosphere of a motion picture playhouse was enough to put Sidman into the game with both feet. As we follow his footsteps from post to post we know that each move has been a promotion and that he is well along a successful career in show business.

Leaving the orchestra end of the business he began his showman career with the management of his own house in Holliston, Mass. From there he went to the Ideal theatre, Milford, Mass. He then became manager of the Fine Arts theatre, Westport, Conn., and from there went to the Majestic in Hartford. He is at present in charge of the Kameo theatre, Pittsfield, Mass.

Sidman tells us that he has been very successful with the management of the Pittsfield house. He is wrapped up in his work and if he had to map out another career for himself would choose the motion picture business. He further states there isn't a thought of ever leaving it—not while he is able to carry on. The Club guesses he's settled in New England, alright, for he owns up to being married and is the father of one child.

Augie C. Berkholtz

The game just looked good to him and he started in, Augie C. Berkholtz, owner and manager of the Mermac theatre, West Bend, and the Rivoli, Two Rivers, Wis., informs the Club. And that's not all, by a long shot—A. C. was broke when he started off—so we know that show business must have looked unusually attractive to this Round Tabler.

His first venture in pictures took place in an old post office building at Rio, Wis. He moved in with 115 camp chairs and a flicker show was begun. A reverend gentleman of the community persistently viewed him in the light of a public nuisance, but he managed to keep open a whole year. Then a hardware concern bought the building and he was forced to close. He then moved to Red Granite, Wis., where he conducted a show for over ten years. This house burned in 1923 and he immediately started operations in West Bend, later adding the Two Rivers house. The Empire also existed at that time in Two Rivers but he bought the house and closed it.

Berkholtz has never been connected with any of the circuits, having always been an owner-manager. That he is active in civic affairs we can well believe for he is a member of A. F. & A. M. No. 138, West Bend, Loyal Order of Moose, No. 1038, belongs to the local Kiwanis, the Commercial Club, the Air Club, and is a member of the Wisconsin M. P. T. O. There are others, he says, and they keep him poor. Yes, Berkholtz is married and is the father of a fifteen-year-old boy. It is a bet that like father like son and that it won't be long before the Club will be welcoming the younger Berkholtz as a manager of a motion picture theatre. As any rate, the Club hopes that this may happen.

If he had to choose a career again he guesses it would still be the theatre business. As long as it pays, at least.

The "SUPREME COMMANDER" Cooling System—the result of scientific research and experience in theatre cooling—commands your attention.

In this modern system Nature's own elements, Heat, Water and Air work for you to produce NATURAL REFRIGERATION – actual degree cooling in your theatre plus effective temperature—a sense of physical cooling comparable to 70 degrees

PLUS

Absolute silence in operation—positive control with 5 definite cooling speeds—no sensation of drafts (made possible by the exclusive Supreme Automatic Oscillating Air Diffuser)

PLUS

Moderate first cost and subsequent low operating expense.

Consider the benefits you can derive from the installation of this modern, effective cooling system in your theatre. Guard now against a repetition of another summer like 1930.

HEAR YE! HEAR YE!

IMPORTANT

IN THE THEATRE AS WELL AS IN THE COURT ROOM

IT'S the law of the land — every person is entitled to a "hearing"— Especially is this true in a theatre . . . because the public pays to hear. You may not be breaking a law if the hearing conditions in your theatre are not right, but you certainly are losing patronage and profits.

Poor acoustics can be easily and permanently corrected by treating your theatre walls and ceiling with Insulite Acoustile. Hard surfaces reflect sound energy, causing reverberations and echoes which distort and garble both voice and music. Insulite Acoustile is scientifically constructed to absorb excess sound energy. It is the ideal material for correcting acoustics, because it is more uniformly efficient in absorbing sound energy over the entire frequency range than any other material.

And remember — treating your theatre with Insulite Acoustile is the economical method of correcting poor acoustics. It can be easily and quickly applied to new or existing surfaces. Expensive remodeling or closing the house for an extended period is not necessary.

Insulite Acoustile will improve the appearance of any theatre. The tile-like units can be arranged in an unlimited variety of patterns to harmonize with any architectural scheme and can be beautifully decorated to achieve any desired color effect.

COOLING that matches the UPS and DOWNS of temperature

DIVIDENDS in actual dollars are rewarding the users of Kooler-Aire. From far and near folks come to enjoy it. Regardless of the outside heat, Kooler-Aire keeps your audience refreshed and contented.

With this system you get Nature's Healthful Coolness—avoiding both the drafty discomforts of over-cooling and the meager results from insufficient cooling. It matches the daily ups and downs of temperature. This system automatically reduces the temperature 6 to 19 degrees in proportion to the outside weather. The hotter it gets—the more Kooler-Aire cools. In addition its hydraulic remote control gives you an ample number of speeds for regulating the air volume exactly to meet varying conditions. Kooler-Aire uses 100% fresh air—no recirculation of stale, muggy, used air.

MAKE this COMPARISON

We believe that Alexander Smith CRESTWOOD Carpet offers you more for your money than any other grade of carpet made. But don't take our word for it,—we may be prejudiced. Make this comparison yourself:—

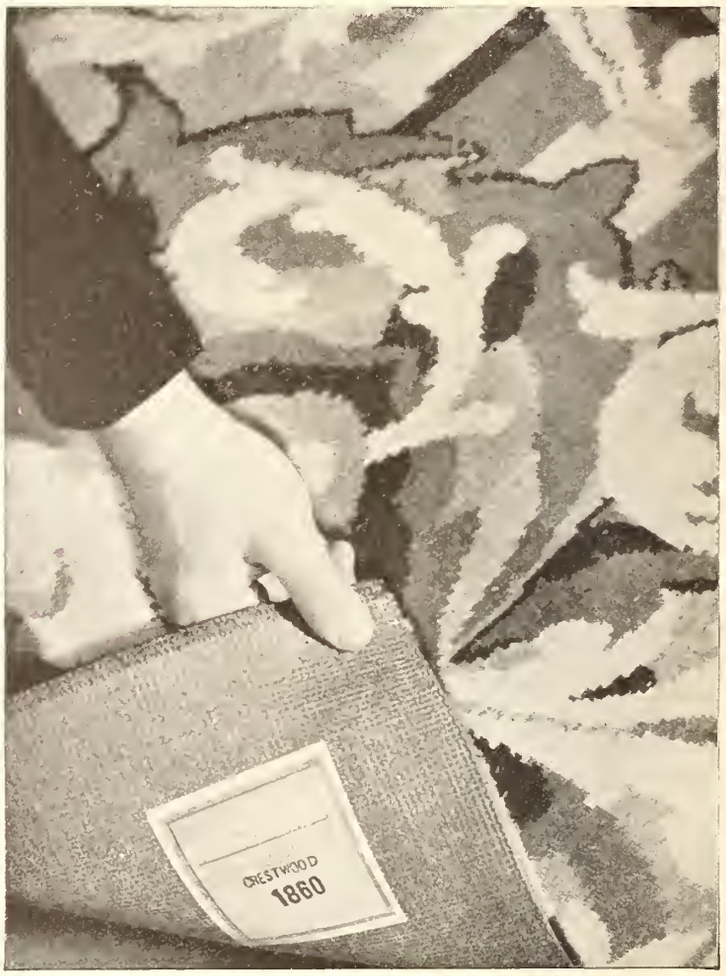
COMPARE Crestwood with any other carpet at anywhere near its price.

COMPARE the wool from which it is made.



COMPARE the depth of pile.

COMPARE the density of weave.

COMPARE the richness and uniformity of colorings. (You never see streaks in Crestwood).

COMPARE the attractive new patterns.

When you have made this comparison you will understand why CRESTWOOD is the largest selling grade of carpet in the world. And why it is used by hundreds of theatres, in every state in the Union—among them Fox, Warner Bros. and Publix. If there is not a dealer convenient, write us for CRESTWOOD color cards and quality samples. W. & J. Sloane, sole selling agents, 577 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Pre-Cratered 9 mm x 20″ High Intensity Projector Carbons

ANOTHER achievement of National Carbon research.

The history of National Projector Carbons is one of constant improvement. But the merit of each new idea is definitely proved, by exacting laboratory and service tests, before it is applied to the product.

The latest improvement is the pre-cratering of 9 mm x 20″ National High Intensity Projector Carbons.

Exhaustive tests, both in the laboratory and in actual theatre projection, have shown that pre-cratering achieves two highly important results. It enables the arc to "burn in" much more quickly and smoothly. It results in clean burning when the arc is struck on a new carbon. The Projectionist will recognize the value of these features.

All 9 mm x 20″ High Intensity Carbons now leaving our factory are pre-cratered. Also, the holder end of each carbon is beveled for easy insertion in the holder jaws. There is no extra charge.

¶ No matter whether or not an innovation deeply affects established practice, it is enough that it be an innovation. And innovations always have the ability to stir up speculation concerning their possibilities. Naturally, the first Trans-Lux theatre has this ability. It presents decidedly that kind of an innovation. Superficial? Perhaps. Then again—who can tell? Interest in it, at least, is high—and has been difficult to satisfy. The secrets (if they may be called that) of Trans-lux are closely guarded, and with some reason other than the psychological effect of such an attitude, since the opening of the first Trans-Lux theatre has brought more than one inquiry about its methods from those who confess contemplation of a similar venture. Hence the absence from the press of comprehensive and authentic information concerning the first of a circuit of rear-projection, low-cost theatres—until this issue of BETTER THEATRES. What this theatre is, is told in The Trans-Lux System of Operation. What it means, readers can speculate upon, and the future decide. . . . George Schutz is editor, F. H. Richardson, projection expert, of BETTER THEATRES.

¶ Organists have never been without ideas. In reflecting upon rather distant days when organ music was one of the theatre's most publicized features, those who have been closely associated with the more prominent performers thereon realizes what showmen scores of these musicians became. Are they contributing as mightily to the entertainment? Has sound not only somewhat obscured them, as a professional class, but also discouraged their ingenuity? In point of quantity, yes. In point of quality, we have evidence to support a negative answer. The organ attained too much public interest and adapted itself too well to the motion picture theatre's general appeal, for the familiar, resplendent console to disappear from our pits altogether, and in many instances in which it has disappeared, removal quite possibly was without patrons' approval. But that is not the point—the subject has so many important angles that it invites extended comment. However, the only reason for speaking of it here is that recently we ran across an organist's showman-like ingenuity of a kind that used to be rather common and now is so rare as to occasion surprise. In Featuring the Organ With Light Effects there is proof of more, perhaps, than that there are still organists who are alert showmen. The thought is also provoked that there is plenty of real theatrical "kick" in those pipes yet. Shepherd Brinckley, himself the inventor of the mechanism involved, is also a theatre organist.

¶ It was in the last issue that we remarked that Nat Karson could always be counted on for something provocative. In the April 11th issue was published a group of original creations in which he remodeled (on paper, it must be added) a typical atmospheric theatre of period design, in accordance with his own very individual ideas. The reaction led us to hunt through his sketch book to see if the experimentation he indulges in when relieved of work-a-day affairs, had not produced something as stimulating. Two things of this sort we found, then added three other sketches that really have found application, as later developed, in a theatre (A Group of Designs). As for the others—yet who knows but what some day they too may not be thought so impracticable for commercial purposes? Nat Karson is a designer and magazine artist residing in New York. Much of his work has been in various ways for the motion picture theatre.

¶ Two currents in the theatre sound stream led to the preparation of the series, What the Manager Should Know About Sound, which begins in this issue. One is that the manager today is more than ever responsible for the technical factors involved in an effective performance. The other is that methods in sound equipment operation and maintenance have materially changed so that the manager has considerable use for at least elementary knowledge of projection and sound technics. Mr. Theatre Sound Engineer considers that his special professional affiliations do not permit use of his name over the articles. Better Theatres is quite willing, however, to vouch for the authenticity of his knowledge, which, of course, the articles themselves make unnecessary.

¶ Regarding the other features, a few identifications are to the point: Ben Schlanger (The Economics of Theatre Remodeling) is a New York architect—who, by the way, is the first to be chosen to read a technical paper on theatre design at a convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. . . . Carl Henry Boller (Adapting the Teatre to a Shallow Lot) is a prominent Los Angeles architect of long experience as a designer of motion picture theatres. . . . W. H. Mooring, (A British Interpretation of the Modernistic), is editor of The Bioscope, leading English film trade paper. . . . Charles Aaronson (Interior Treatment in Egyptian Motifs) is a member of the HERALD staff, attached to the New York office. . . . Leo T. Parker (Legal Aspects of Theatre Management) is a Cincinnati attorney and a regular contributor to BETTER THEATRES.

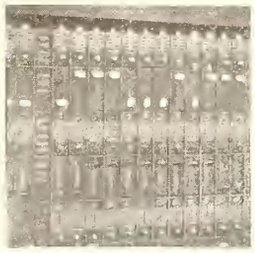
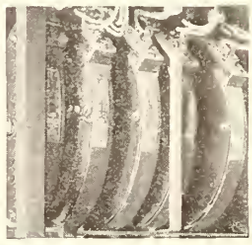
"Watch your dimmer plates and you'll end SPOTTY lighting"

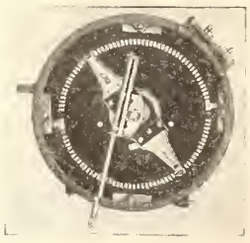
MR. C. J. BREWSTER OF THE FOX-MIDWESCO THEATER CHAIN TELLS HOW HE IMPROVES LIGHTING EFFECTS.



"THESE days when lighting is such a big part of most shows, it takes good dimmer plates to stand up day after day. None but the best of plates can handle this constant duty without burning out.



"The worst trouble with lights comes with quick dimming from full bright to 'black out.' It takes a good dimmer plate to keep your light blends from becoming 'spotty.' Good plates keep your lighting smooth as velvet."



The reason so many showmen prefer Cutler-Hammer "Simplicity" Dimmers is due to the 110 steps provided between full bright and "black out"—a velvet-smooth, even flow of light is always assured. Special cophite contact brushes prevent pitting of contact. Double the usual number of contacts can be handled by a C-H Dimmer, thereby keeping your dimmerboard compact and easy to manage.

Be sure C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers are on the board you install—specify them too for all replacements. These long-lived dimmer plates have been the choice of showmen for over thirty years. Read the latest C-H dimmer book "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater." CUTLER-HAMMER, Inc., Pioneer Manufacturers of Electric Control Apparatus, 1254 St. Paul Avenue, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

THIS month the Society of Motion Picture Engineers again meets in one of its semi-annual conventions that have meant so much to the advancement of the motion picture. We have been privileged to learn something of what will take place, and on this basis we have no temerity in venturing the prophecy that the 1931 spring convention of the S. M. P. E. will be the most fruitful in the history of the organization. It appears to us therefore fitting, indeed, that the event will take place at the more technical end of the continent-long trail that connects film capital to film capital.

It is not, however, only because the agenda lists especially timely subjects, that the 1931 spring convention promises so much in practical application of science to the current needs of the motion picture. A great measure of this meeting's peculiar significance lies, we feel, in its intention, as revealed by the agenda, to extend the purview of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to the building in which the motion picture reaches realization.

No more convincing evidence that the S.M.P.E. is alert to its opportunities could be presented than its plan to begin with the 1931 spring convention, technical investigation of the relationship of the theatre structure to the motion picture. At least one architect will introduce theatre design into the purview of the society at this session, and we understand that such interests will be henceforth included in the organization's regular activities.

Engineering is certainly no stranger to architecture. But is not the usual association one in which the engineer mainly carries out the architect's ideas? Essentially, this is commonly so, beyond the preparations for equipment that the architect, of course, must make.

In the motion picture theatre, however, the usefulness of the building depends to an extraordinary degree on its character as an engineering product. It is not just an enclosure from the elements having a certain facility of arrangement for seating a large number of people. Besides the commoner considerations of heating and ventilating and fireproofing, the motion picture theatre involves acoustical and visual considerations of a peculiarly delicate kind. These latter are fundamental—they are, indeed, the nucleus of the entire plan—and it were better that the theatre had no beauty whatever than that they be attended to without consummate skill.

We think that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is only turning to a field that has always been within its province, in bestowing its attention on the theatre structure. The architect should welcome its aid. Much of that aid will come, of course, from architectural workers themselves, the society acting as a leader in a movement to extract fundamental values out of the present preoccupation with wholly extraneous matter—most of it made of pink plaster. And much will come from the engineers. It is a two-way collaboration, consisting principally in the constant search for, and application of, methods by which to make the motion picture theatre better serve its real purpose.

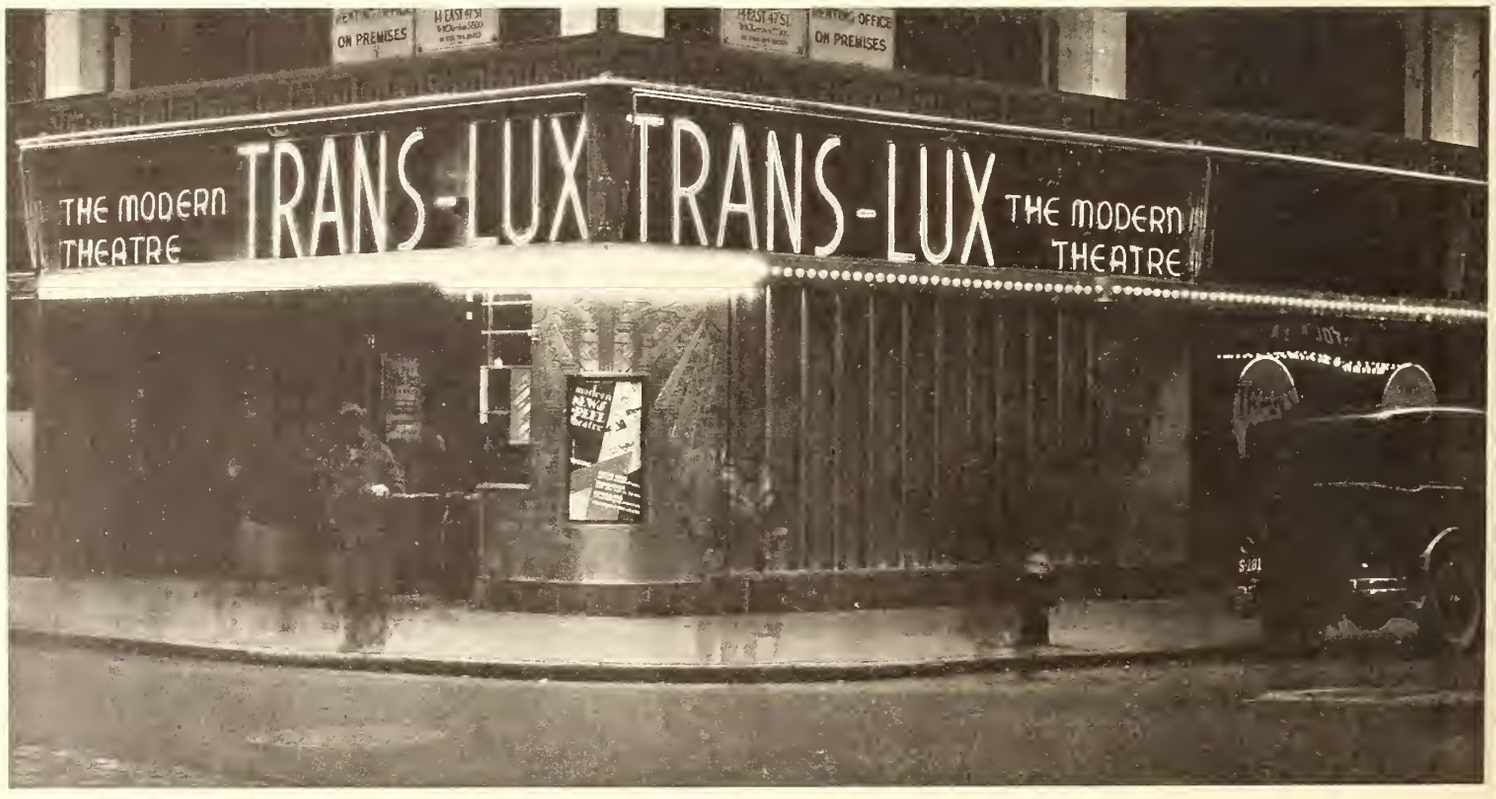
THE TRANS-LUX SYSTEM OF OPERATION

small investment, low cost production, rapid turnover

By GEORGE SCHUTZ and F. H. RICHARDSON

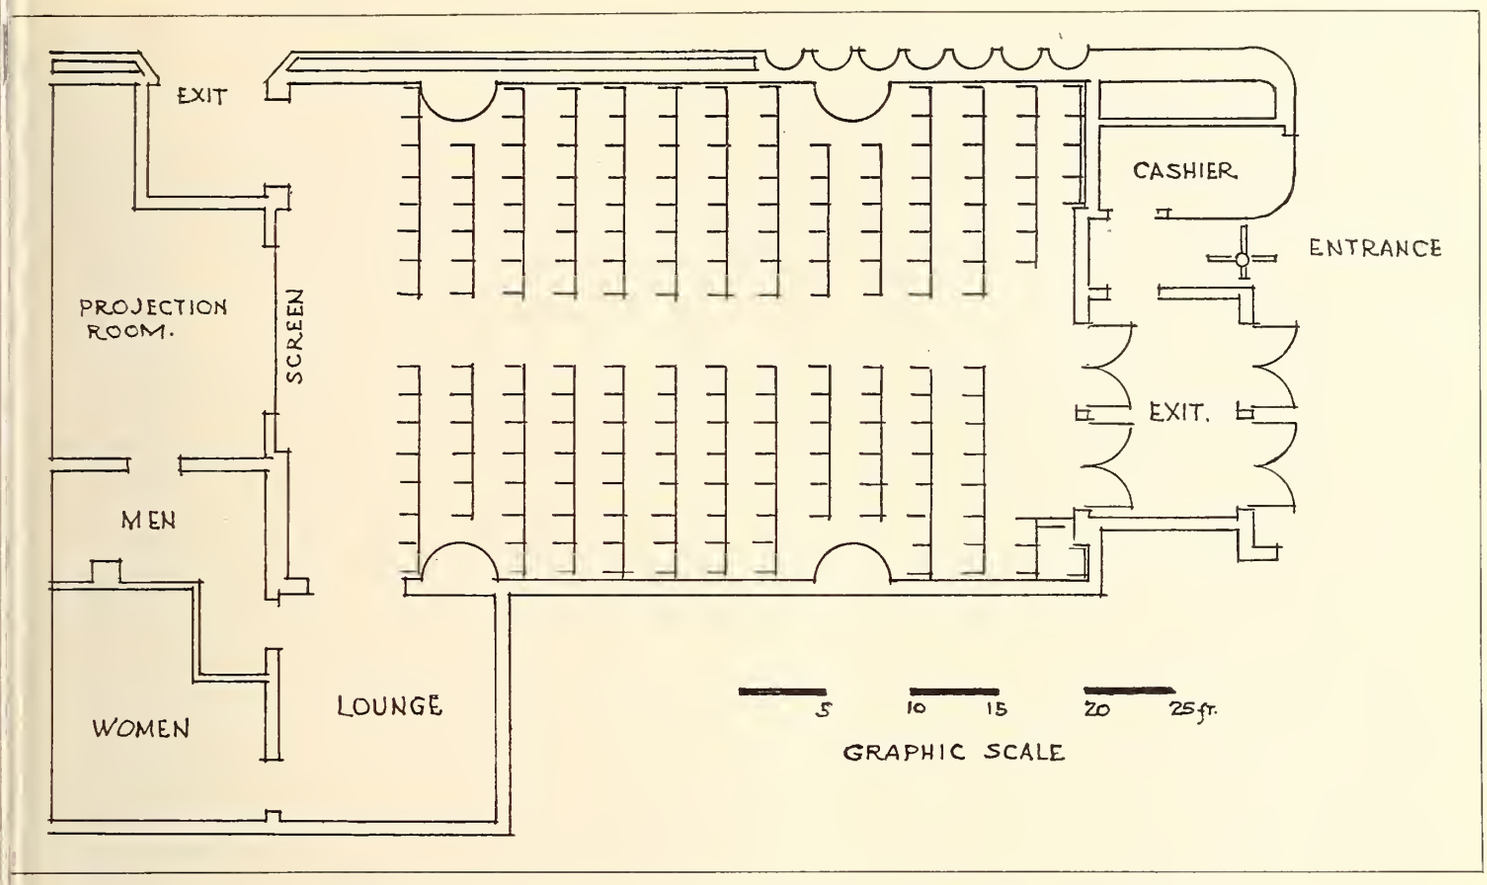
THE MOTION PICTURE theatre has traveled so far along the path toward bigger, or at least more resplendent, buildings and methods of operation, that any attempt it makes to turn back in the direction of the store-room from which it sprung is rather startling. Yet this in a certain sense is exactly the direction in which the Trans-Lux idea points. This inclination toward the simple beginnings of motion picture entertainment, plus a modern industrialization of theatre operation, appears, indeed, to be its most striking characteristic.

It is commonly in reflecting on how institutions so often begin unassumingly, then grow devastatingly, that the Trans-Lux idea takes on importance. The 16,000 patrons a week that the first Trans-Lux theatre has enjoyed since its opening in New York, need not be interpreted as of special significance. It presents newsreels at a busy corner and its avowed success follows that of the Embassy Newsreel theatre on Broadway, which is entirely orthodox in all those things that the Trans-Lux idea is not. An obvious explanation of the success of both ventures is that the public, at least in New York, likes newsreels. The significance that the one has in this success, and that the other has not, lies, it would seem, in an encouragement of its wide extension not only by the Trans-Lux Movies Corporation, the instigators, but by others—and in the possible effect of such extension upon the attitude of the public toward the motion picture theatre in general and its methods of purveying entertainment.



There is always a tendency, of course, to place too much stress upon superficialities, and it may be that the motion picture has gained its present prestige entirely through the advancement of sheer cinematic art. On the other hand, it may be more in the interests of accuracy to name the advancement of the theatre itself, its technical improvement, its refinement, its very glorification of the entertainment offered, as an important contributing cause.

The first of the Trans-Lux theatres consists almost entirely in one rectangular room about 45 feet long, 30 feet wide and 14 feet high. An earlier Trans-Lux invention, embodied in a stock reporting device now widely used, led to the application of similar principles to projection from behind the screen for public motion picture exhibition, and this method of projection is employed here for the first time. Thus is eliminated special construction for a projection room at the rear of the auditorium.



So far as architectural treatment has been resorted to in reconditioning the former store space that the theatre now occupies, the design is based on so-called modernistic patterns. It is by Howe & Lescaze of New York. The architects were L. E. Denslow, consultant, and Thomas W. Lamb, associate. They have sought to contrive a basic scheme that is flexible and inexpensive. The investment per theatre is estimated at between $30,000 and $50,000.

Only the first floor of the building thus has been remodeled for the theatre, and on the exterior, this level has been superficially cut off from the rest of the building by the extension of a neon-bordered panel along both the front and side of the building. This panel carries the name.

Directly below in front is a narrow, shallow lobby opening on the street. To the right is the box office, and between it

Exterior view of the first Trans-Lux theatre in New York City. Lighting is the new neon intensified white and yellow tubing.

A schematic plan of the single floor of the Trans-Lux theatre on Madison Avenue, New York.

nd two exits, is a turnstile which forms distinguishing part of the Trans-Lux dea. Originally intended to contribute greatly to the reduced-cost phase of Trans-Lux operation by enabling patrons to gain admission merely by inserting a coin, the urnstile at the first of these theatres now has little or no economical significance, ince a cashier has been found necessary nyway.

Decorative treatment in this area consists almost exclusively in the use of black marble-like surfaces contrasting with silver rims, and aluminum-finished metal, with ll patterns inter-relating straight lines and curves according to the familiar "modernistic" conception. The corner piece is a curving surface of aluminum-finished metal reaching from base to sign-panel, nd into it has been pressed a symbolic representation of Light. At its left, the black horizontal panels of the box office intrudes n a curving line, in its center is a poster frame. The use of an aluminum-finished metal covering over the unimaginative walls of the structure, is continued for a short distance along the side.

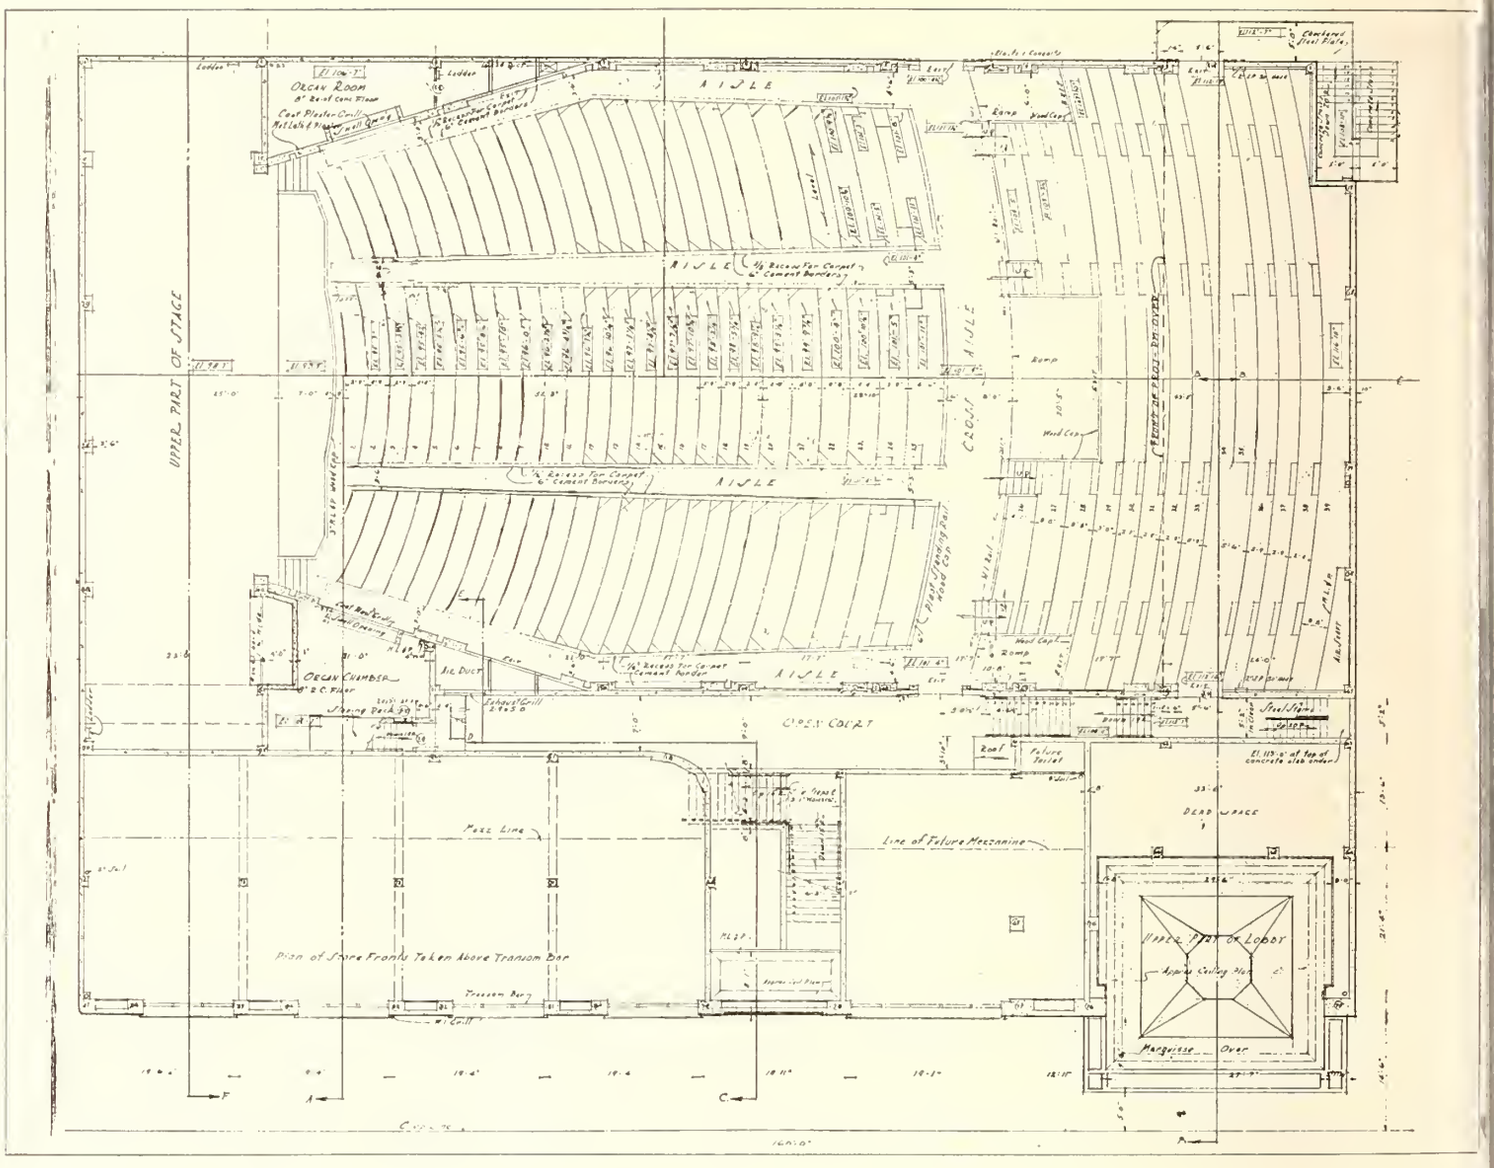
There is no foyer. The seating begins mmediately inside the inner lobby doors, of which there are only two, used for both ngress and egress.

Only a small space is allowed at the rear for passage to the seating, this space being to the left. The corresponding area on the right side of the auditorium is used for seating, extending entirely to the rear wall. There are but 158 seats, arranged n two sections with a center aisle.

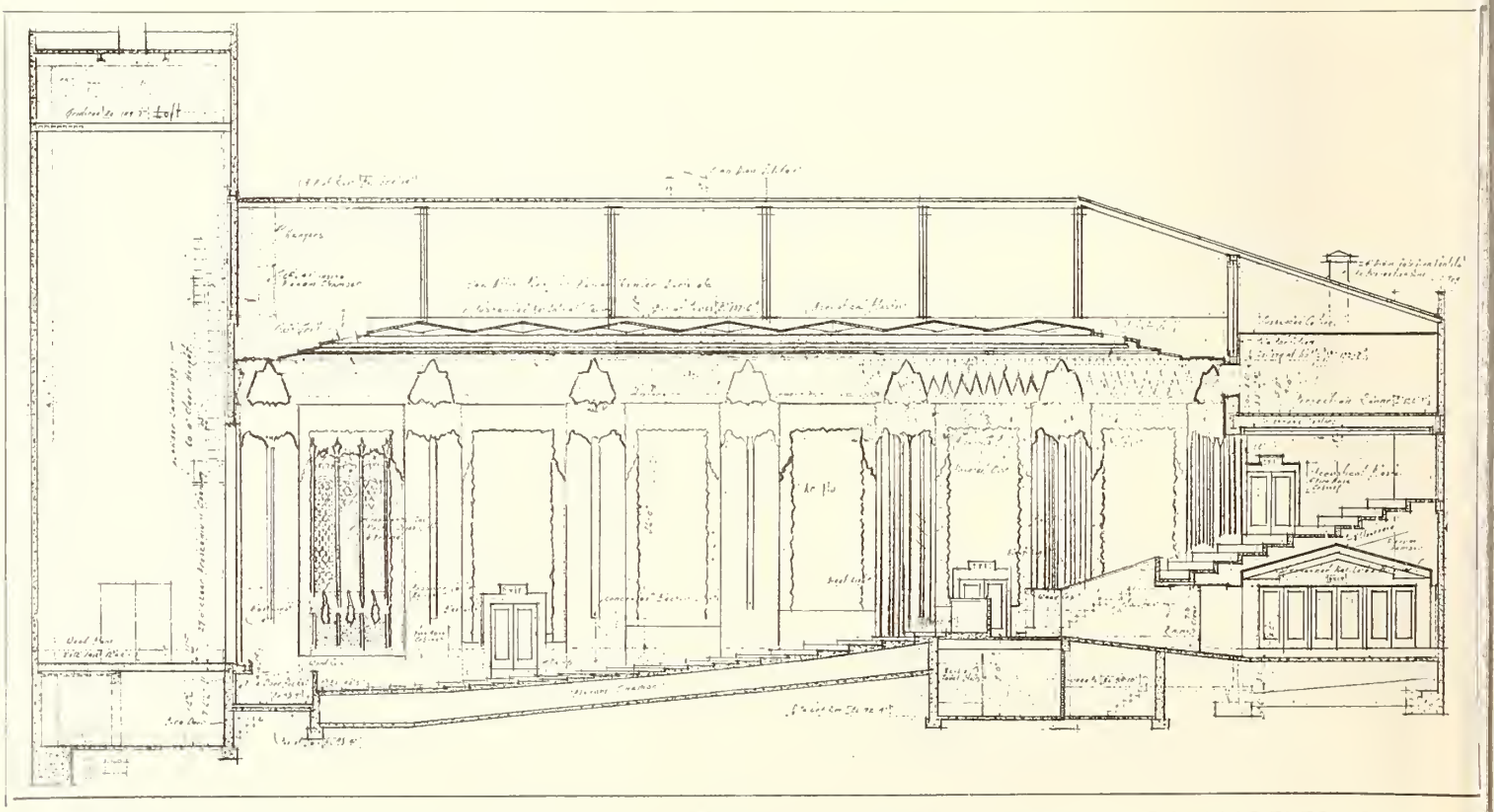
The walls are unbroken except for two columns on each side, one toward the rear and one at the corner of the seating area. These are semi-circular surfaces reaching from floor to ceiling, and represent an adaptation of structural supports. Originally the plan called for these to have aluminum-finished metal surfaces, but this treatment was found to create glare, and they have been painted over. The color scheme is gray-blue, with silver trimming.

The ceiling is broken up into three sections, extending laterally. The central portion is lower than the side portions, and the latter are illuminated from coves along the edges of the former.

The floor does not slope, but the rear seats are elevated a little by short steps.

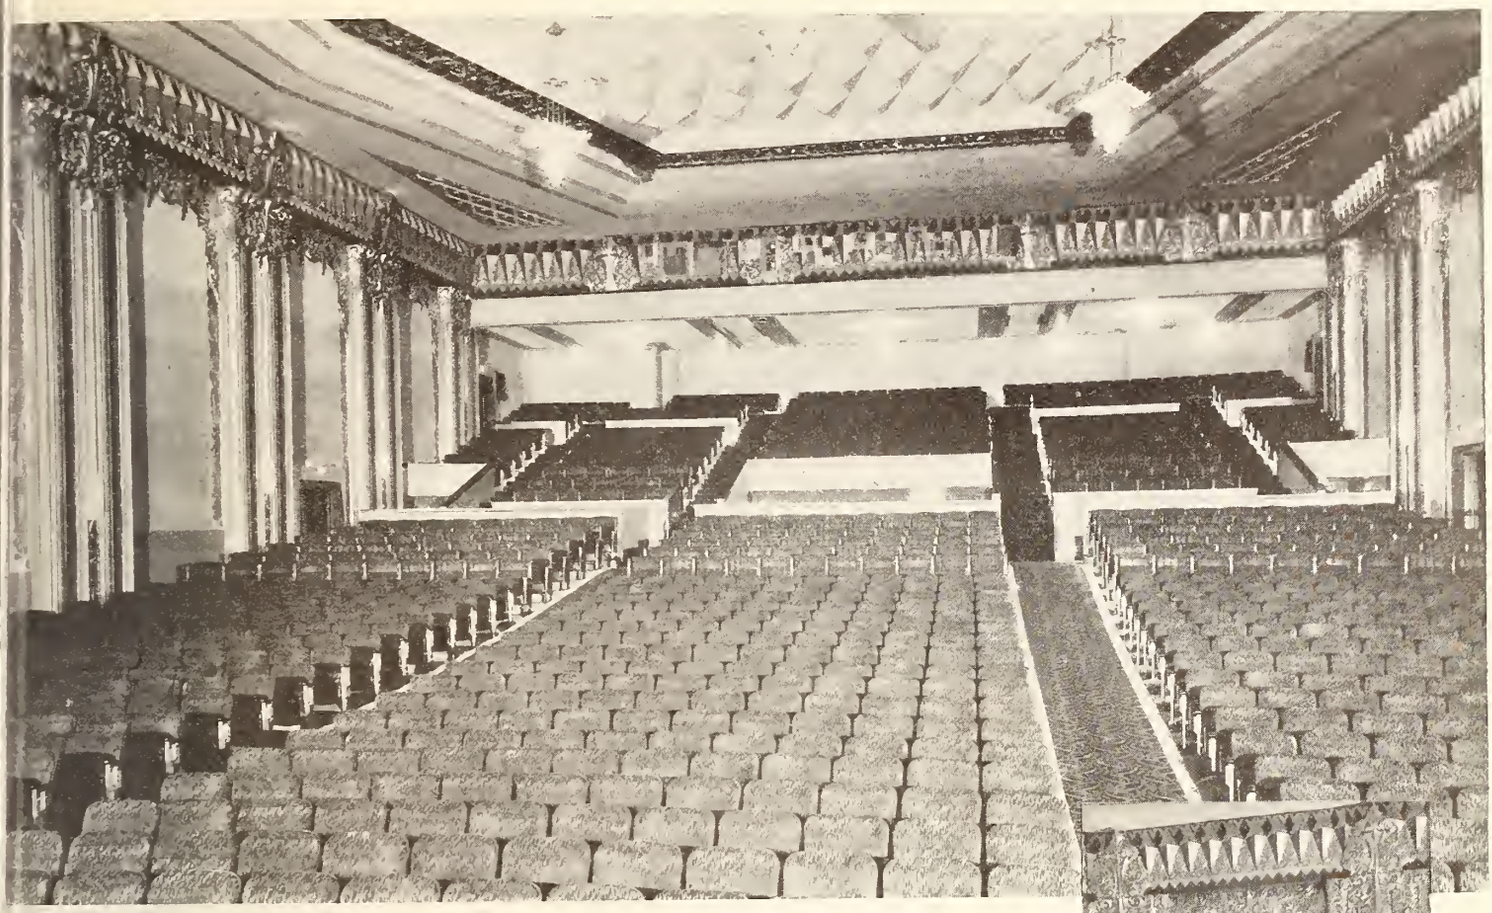


The lounges and retiring rooms are located at the left forward end of the theatre, with the retiring rooms to the left of the projection room area behind the screen. At the other side of the forward portion is an exit. The faults of this arrangement lie, of course, in the fact that patrons are thus invited to pass through the forward part of the auditorium, in line of vision, and this bad feature is accentuated by the existence of only one aisle, and that a middle one.



The screen is not of usual size, but its smallness is at least feasible in such a short house. The Trans-Lux lens system requires that the distance of the projectors from the screen be approximately an inch to the square foot of image. The projectors are about ten feet from the screen.

The screen, of course, is transparent. Horn location is at the sides, arrangement not uncommon, however, with RCA Photophone installations, which is the sound equipment used.



The projectors have been extensively rebuilt in order to place them as close together as possible. This is necessary, of course, in order to eliminate the keystone effect resulting from such a short throw. In order to obtain the original values of the scene, the film is reversed, and in order to reproduce sound-on-film, the entire assembly of exciting lamp, aperture and photocell has been transferred to the left side, pointing forward. The focus of the exciting lamp on the track has been readjusted to account for the thickness of the film through which reversal of the film forces the light to pass.

The system, from creation of the theatre in which the entertainment is given to the mechanics of operation, is thus one of utmost economy—an application of the industrial principle of low production cost plus rapid turnover. At present a regular staff of projectionists is required, but the Trans-Lux system has been created in contemplation of a time when automatic projection can eliminate all but possibly one technician. Already the non-technical personnel has been reduced to a manager, a cashier and a porter. The trappings of the establishment in which the motion picture has come to be merchandized, winning a place in the mind of the public at least equal to that of theatre art as expressed in the stage, are everywhere eliminated, and motion picture entertainment becomes vended in the best Woolworthian manner, with 26 newsreel performances a day at 25 cents an admission. It is significant that the only change in this routine that will come from the presentation of dramatic screen entertainment by this method, as is now contemplated, will be in the number of performances that are presented per day.

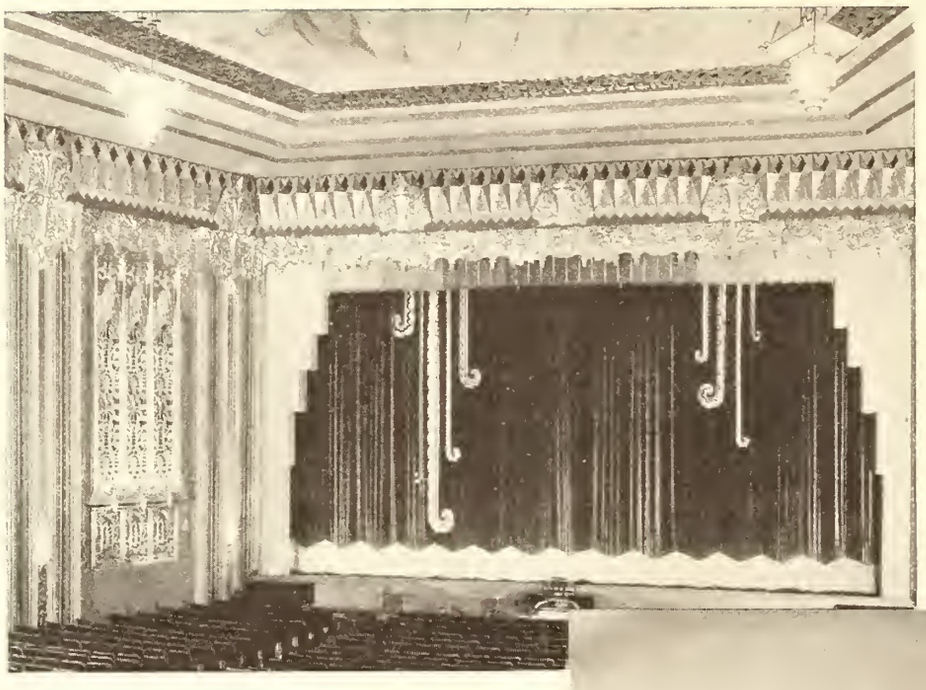
ADAPTING THE THEATRE TO A SHALLOW LOT

For this house the frontage was 160 feet, while the depth was 120. The resulting structure is discussed here by the architect

By CARL HENRY BOLLER

CREATED with the idea of obtaining a maximum seating capacity by dispensing with a balcony on a limited ground area, and providing the mandatory clear standing room at the rear of the orchestra seating section, a semi-one-floor, stadium type theatre was adopted as the most economic solution of the problem presented in the projection of the Stadium theatre. This new Fox theatre was recently opened in Los Angeles.



This building occupies a lot with a 160-foot frontage, but a depth of only 120 feet to an alley. This forced the plan into an "L" type entrance scheme, with the theatre flanking the alley, and with the lobby extending from one end of the foyer to the street entrance.

The auditorium is 80 feet wide, leaving 40 feet along the street frontage, where there is an emergency exit court flanking the auditorium, and a two-story structure comprising shops and theatre lobby on the ground floor, and offices for the theatre company on the second floor. The auditorium is 80x136 feet, leaving 24 feet for the stage.

The general construction of the entire building is fireproof, consisting of steel and reinforced concrete. The architectural design is modern. A tower of monolithic concrete, with a copper and glass lantern topped with a beacon light, dominates the exterior effect. The entire front, including all sides of the tower, is lighted with both colored flood and neon lights.

The lobby is finished in black marble, with gold decorations and white metal poster cases. The floor is of vari-colored terrazzo—in sunburst design—radiating from the box office in all directions, extending upon the sidewalk. The ceiling is reflected in a similar design, extending to the front of the marquee. The box office is of black marble and gold metal and is glazed with polished plate. It has broad borders of sand etched designs. The vestibule and foyer doors are of mahogany, with full-length glass panels etched in all-over sand-blast designs. These two sets of doors effectively cut out all street noises.

Entering the lobby, we pass through a 20-feet vestibule, to the foyer, which is 22x80 feet and extends to the alley, where three pairs of exit doors are provided. The stadium seating section is located over this foyer. Entrance to the auditorium from this foyer is by way of three tunnels. The central one is 20 feet wide, while those at the side aisles are six feet wide. All have slightly inclined floors to a cross aisle eight feet wide, that extends across the house between the orchestra and stadium section, giving access to the aisles.

The four aisles to the stadium section ascend straight upward without the usual turns often adopted at the expense of seating space to obtain needed run room to the first tier, which in this instance is 37 inches above the cross aisle, with steps to the latter of not more than 7½ inches of rise, and with treads not less than 10½ inches wide. Patrons in the first tier have a perfect view of the entire orchestra floor without being annoyed by those passing or standing in the cross aisle. An additional cross aisle is provided half-way up in the stadium section, connecting with exit doors at either side and with stairs to the ground.

THE ORCHESTRA SECTION has a bowled floor, consisting of three banks and four aisles. All seat rows, where the grade is more than one inch to the row, are level platforms, with the ends ramped flush with the aisles. There is an enclosed standing rail four feet high at the back of the last loge section at the cross aisle. The orchestra section has two pairs of exit doors at either side, exclusive of those in the foyer.

The total seating capacity is 1,179, consisting of 603 opera chairs, and 184 loge chairs in the orchestra; and 348 opera chairs, and 44 loge chairs in the stadium. The opera chairs are spaced 33 inches back to back, and the loge chairs are 44 inches back to back. All are fully upholstered on back and seat with silk velour in handsome color designs. The loges were especially made and have high backs with fixed seats and are overstuffed.

The decoration throughout the theatre is in the modern style, with a Renaissance influence. The main ceiling is of an unusual design, created with the object of breaking up the sound waves (in which it proved highly efficient over a broad expanse of surface). The large central field, surrounded with an ornamental gilt staff grille

View of the exterior by day. Construction is of steel and reinforced concrete, carrying out a modern skyscraper achitectural pattern. The tower is of monolithic concrete, with a copper and glass lantern surmounting it, lighted at night and slant borders to side and end walls, consists of an all-over design of diamond shaped units 12 feet long, with facets projecting two feet downwards, precast in acoustical plaster. Though the ceiling is in monotone, a constantly changing prismatic color effect is obtained by the aid of a three-color lighting scheme thrown on these surfaces from different directions.

The side walls are ornamented with an elaborate ornamental plaster frieze and with fluted pilasters in pairs, decorated with gold metal leaf and black. The wall panels are of acoustical plaster of high absorption.

The entire ceiling and all walls of the foyer are decorated with gold metal leaf and lacquered, with inset and border design painted in high colors. All woodwork is in Brazilian mahogany, and all door panels are sand-carved in all-over designs.

The rest rooms for the patrons are located a trifle below the foyer level, under the lower portion of the stadium section. They consist of smoking rooms, cosmetic and lounge rooms, marble and tile retiring rooms, and ushers' dressing and locker rooms.

All of the foyer, vestibule and lounge rooms, and all aisles and loges are thickly carpeted with richly designed velvet laid on one inch of ozite padding. All sundry furniture in the foyer and rest rooms is of special design to match the interior of their respective rooms.

The projection room is located above the rear of the stadium section and is suspended from a roof truss in front. It extends the full width of the auditorium and has a depth of 24 feet to the rear wall, with an area of 1,650 feet of floor space, divided into several rooms. It is reached by an iron stairway from the inner court and has a fire escape to the alley. In this place is located complete equipment of projectors and sound equipment, the main distribution switch board, and dimmers for the house, which have dual control for the stage as well. All metal work benches and cases for films and records are of monel metal, and the floor is covered with cork linoleum. Besides the projection room there are rooms for motor generator, main electrical switch-board, battery room, locker and lounge room, and exhaust vent fan room for the theatre.

The proscenium opening is 50 feet wide and 25 feet high.

Section of the foyer from the vestibule end. At left are the tunnels to the auditorium, one 20 feet wide, two six feet wide. It is over the foyer that the stadium section rises, thereby using the available area to greatest economical advantage.

THE ECONOMICS OF THEATRE REMODELING

II.—Material and Construction Costs

By BEN SCHLANGER

IN THE FIRST article certain general methods and considerations of procedure were recommended for the remodeling of a theatre. Since the feasibility of these changes are largely subject to the actual costs they may incur, it is necessary to analyze how they can be most economically made.

The first items of cost to be given consideration here are those which involve the actual walls and other supporting parts of the structure. Changes affecting these parts are, in most cases, made either to enlarge the structure, or to erect within it an intermediate level for the purpose of creating additional seating capacity, lounge and rest rooms. This additional area can be obtained by either adding to the width or the depth of the structure, or by constructing a balcony, if the auditorium is sufficiently high to allow for it.

It is more economical to add to the depth of a theatre than it is to add to the width, because this latter involves the demolition of the wall at the side where the width is added, as well as the removal of the roof construction, which must be entirely replaced. However, it is necessary to add to the width when a theatre has only about 14 or slightly more seats to a row. To add to the depth in such a case would be most inadvisable, due to the tunnel-like proportion it would give the auditorium. To erect a balcony requires a new structural steel framework, concrete steppings and stairways to reach it. Although this may prove somewhat costly, it is still a more economical means of obtaining additional space than adding to the area of the building.

The other items of cost to be considered are those which deal with the interior finishes and decorative effects. This includes all false construction work and non-supporting partitions. The interior finish costs really do not determine the feasibility of remodeling because they are subject to various possibilities of decorative effects, the cost of which can be controlled and kept down to a minimum when necessary.

It must be understood that in giving a general idea of the costs of remodeling, they are subject not only to local labor and material markets, but also to the various peculiarities that may arise in the particular project, which only the architect and the contractor can make clear to the theatre owner. It is advisable when the alteration consists in structural work, to consult an architect. However, the following costs serve to give a preliminary prospectus to the theatre owner. The various costs are given in the order of the procedure for construction, and they include the cost for both material and erection.

I
Structural Conditions

Demolition

THE COST of demolition is subject to the value of the materials, such as brick, lumber and steel obtained in demolishing. Sometimes these materials can be re-used on the same job, but usually the labor required for wrecking will cost from $400 to $800 above the value of salvaged materials, when a complete length of brick walls and roof construction is to be removed.

Concrete Footings, Foundations and Walls

Of course an attempt is always made in a remodeling job, to retain as much of the existing masonry walls as possible, provided they are sufficiently strong to carry a new roof construction where necessary. In the event a new section of masonry wall is needed, its cost would be about $400, which includes footings and foundations for a wall, say, 50 feet long, 20 feet high and 12 inches thick. The excavation for such a wall costs comparatively little, provided the foundation does not go down deeper than four feet.

Structural Steel Framework

The cost of steel varies according to the distance the project happens to be from the steel mill, in addition to being subject to current prices. For this reason it is sometimes more economical to use wood trusses in a roof where the building code of the locality will permit it. The cost of steel for a balcony framing of a width of about 60 feet, and a depth of about ten rows of seats, would be about $3,500, whereas for a larger balcony the cost increases rapidly, due to the necessity of longer span girders and trusses. In the case of steel for roof spans—if the span is below 55 feet, rolled girder beams may be used much more economically than fabricated trusses. Fabricated steel is worth about $130 a ton, as against rolled steel beams, which can be erected for about $90 a ton. A rolled girder beam for about a 55-foot span, weighs from a ton and a half to about two tons.

A four inch cinder concrete slab for roof construction is worth about 40c per square foot. Gypsum slabs, which are lighter in weight, can be substituted for somewhat less, but afford also an additional saving due to the lighter weight of steel that can be used with it.

Concrete Steppings for Balcony

The concrete risers and treads that form the pitch of the balcony can be erected for about $1,600 for a balcony of the size mentioned under the cost of steel work. The square foot unit price is about 80c. An allowance of 10c a square foot is necessary for the cement finish on all concrete work.

Stair Construction

A steel stairway having sufficient risers to reach the average balcony level crossover, can be installed for about $225, which includes cement fill for the open type treads. There are two of these usually required.

II
Non-Structural Conditions

Partition Work (Interior)

TERRA COTTA blocks are the most used for erecting partition work because of the elimination of lathing, the plaster being applied directly on the block. The cost is about 22c the square foot for a four-inch thickness. Gypsum blocks are cheaper, but they cannot be used for high walls due to their lack of strength. However, they are recommended for walls less than 12 feet high, because of the light weight they impose on the structural frame.

Treatment of the Auditorium

After the main structural forms are decided on and their costs are approximated, an idea may be had as to how much money is left for the interior treatment. The existing interior treatment, if there is any, may or may not be worth retaining. It might be a matter of adding to it or completely removing it to allow for an entirely new treatment. It is at this point of the process of remodeling that the architect must be consulted. The possibilities of treating the interior are so varied that it makes it difficult to state costs. However a suggestion can be given as to how much is required to get an effect that is pleasing and economical. An abundance of ornamental plaster is not needed. The main form of the auditorium could be so shaped

RECOMMENDATIONS

The following list of recommendations were made by an architectural firm for the remodeling of an actual theatre. They are offered merely illustratively here to show general possibilities in judicious selection of changes to be made.

STAGE APRON

Remove old plaster apron treatment and replace with wood cap and paneled apron.

ORCHESTRA PIT

Remove existing wood rail and replace with terra cotta core and wood face auditorium side—plaster back side—new radiator behind rail.

ORCHESTRA FLOOR

Temporarily remove all seats on floor to be reset as per new layout. Remove all side and rear of orchestra boxes. Increase width of promenade rear of orchestra maintaining present grade. New standee rail at present line of rear loge box. Orchestra seats to be used wherever loge boxes are eliminated creating wider aisles at side walls.

FRONT OF BALCONY

Remove two front rows of this portion thereby providing room for wider orchestra promenade and leaving additional space needed for four new rows of loge seats. Erect new high wall in front of loge seats with short aisle stairways located at existing aisles—one step in crossover. Change grade of ramp leading from orchestra promenade to inner lobby. Barreled effect under soffit of vomitory.

WALL TREATMENT

Create new proscenium effect as per architectural detail; also side wall treatment (new organ grilles); remove present projecting balconies and replace with one feature balcony on each side.

CEILING

New furred ceiling in proscenium portion. Revise mouldings of remaining ceiling. Eliminate all hanging electrical fixtures. Furr rear wall and ceiling to line of picture booth and down over exit door heads. This furring is done to eliminate converging appearance of side and rear walls of rear part of balcony; also to eliminate present influence of picture booth.

in its broad outlines as to be quite interesting, keeping the surfaces simple for the most part and concentrating on a few important places for the chief interest.

The following changes in the interior can be made for from about $1,200 to $5,000, the variation being dependent upon the size of the auditorium. The setting or frame preceding the screen can be given a new treatment consisting in blocking out a new form by means of metal lath furring and plaster. The ceiling shape may be altered by the same means. The side walls may be treated with some simple projections also in the same manner. An allowance of from $500 to $1,200 should be made pending decision as to whether the painting is to be plain or ornamental.

Electrical Work

For additional electrical wiring, exclusive of the necessary power and projection wiring, an allowance of about $500 is justified.

III
Exterior and Facade

Marquee

AN ALLOWANCE of $3,000 for a new marquee and name sign may be allowed if the remodeling is to include in an important way this feature, which today is being treated more elaborately than ever. The new marquee and sign should follow the new tendency of making them closely associated with the architecture of the building, and any new treatment for the facade should be planned with the marquee and name sign in mind.

Flood-Lighting

Frequently much in freshness is easily achieved by arranging for flood-lighting parts of the exterior. It gives a distinctly modern effect and may not top $250.

Exterior Wall Treatment

Under this classification, it is an opportune time to mention again the importance of good design for the marquee and sign. A great saving can be accomplished by keeping the facade wall extremely simple, so as to serve as a background for the marquee and sign, which showmen are correctly coming to consider as the most important features of the theatre front.

A light shade of brick, or stucco on brick, is all that is needed for this purpose. One should be sure, however, that the wall is high enough to receive any flood-lighting effectively. The cost of such a wall is little more than that for a common brick wall. Cement stucco can be applied for about $2 a square yard. A simple, inexpensive terra cotta coping having an incised design can be used economically to top off the wall.

In closing this series, it may be well to point once more that this discussion should not be taken to minimize the necessity of consultation with experienced architects and engineers in any remodeling job, concerning the owner's specific project. It has rather been intended as a guide to assist the owner and manager of a theatre to answer the question: Just what kind of a theatre have I, and what can I do to make it better?

SMOKING ROOM

Oak wainscot; tile floor (Quarry) and base. Change wood rail to match wainscot.

LADIES' ROOM

Revise toilet increasing from two to four. Water closets — move existing basin and add one in new location. Use metal partitions. New tile floor and walls. Relocate door. Create Cosmetic Room—mirror walls. Revise small stair.

LOUNGE ROOM

Remove skeleton wainscot, leaving base. Lath and plaster ceiling—stucco fireplace. Chair rail on walls. Remove wood rail and replace with new T.C. wall leaving opening in center and small opening on either side. Remove columns if possible.

INNER LOBBY

Remove ramps and replace with stairs as per detail. Access doors under stairs to motor generator room, porters' closet and meter room. Furr ceiling at both ends of lobby. Install recessed drinking fountain. Relocate slop sink in Porters' Closet. Remove two present drinking fountains. Patch floor where ramps are removed and raise question of carpets. Change trim on doors to outer lobby.

LOBBY

Change trim on doors to inner lobby eliminating transoms at street set. Furr ceiling down to top of cornice allowing for vertical panel lighting. Change face of panel containing ticket window eliminating two side windows and create new opening with grille. Grilles over radiator openings. Replace brass rail with floor sockets and loose standards. All doors rehung and new door checks.

VESTIBULE

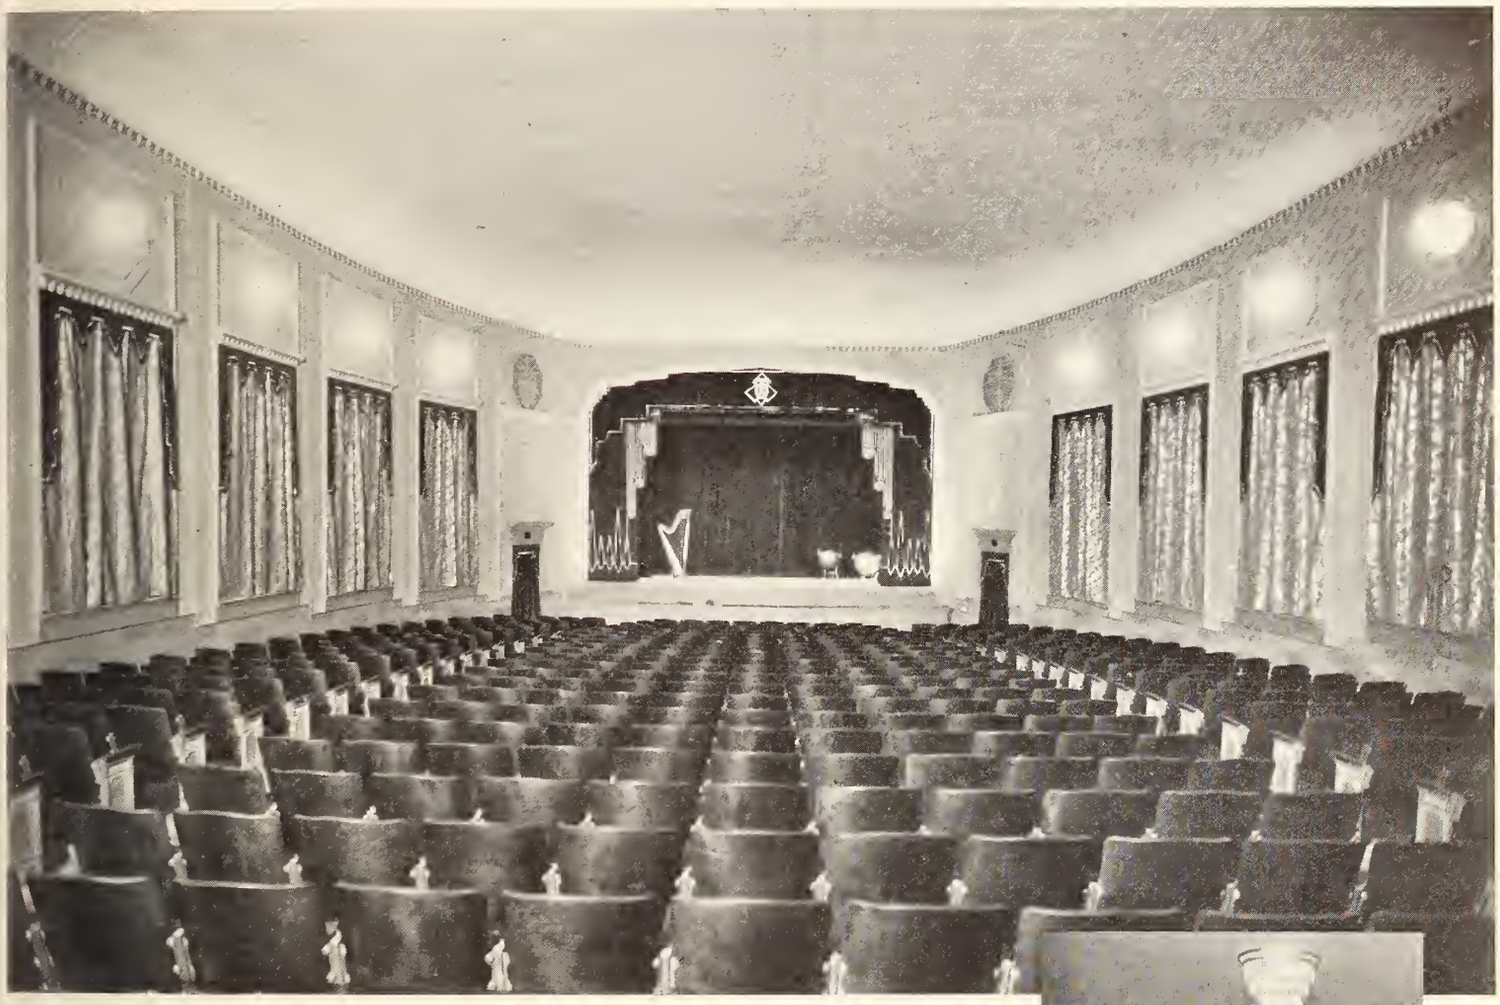
Marble strip at front. Drop soffit of lintel of main opening cement finish to match jambs and jointed.

OUTSIDE

New marquee soffit—louvred. New signs front and sides of marquee. In panel above, remove tile and substitute stucco. Remove two flagpoles. Cap outlets. Paint outside metal exit doors.

An Economical Design for a Small City

Describing the Ord theatre in Ord, Neb., seating 539 on a single floor and constructed at a cost (without equipment or furnishings) totaling $25,000



Upper view: The facade presenting a modernistic decorative effect achieved in buff brick with black brick and standstone trim.

Center view: Corner of the lobby, showing box office and one of the two fireplaces through which hot air is forced for heating purposes.

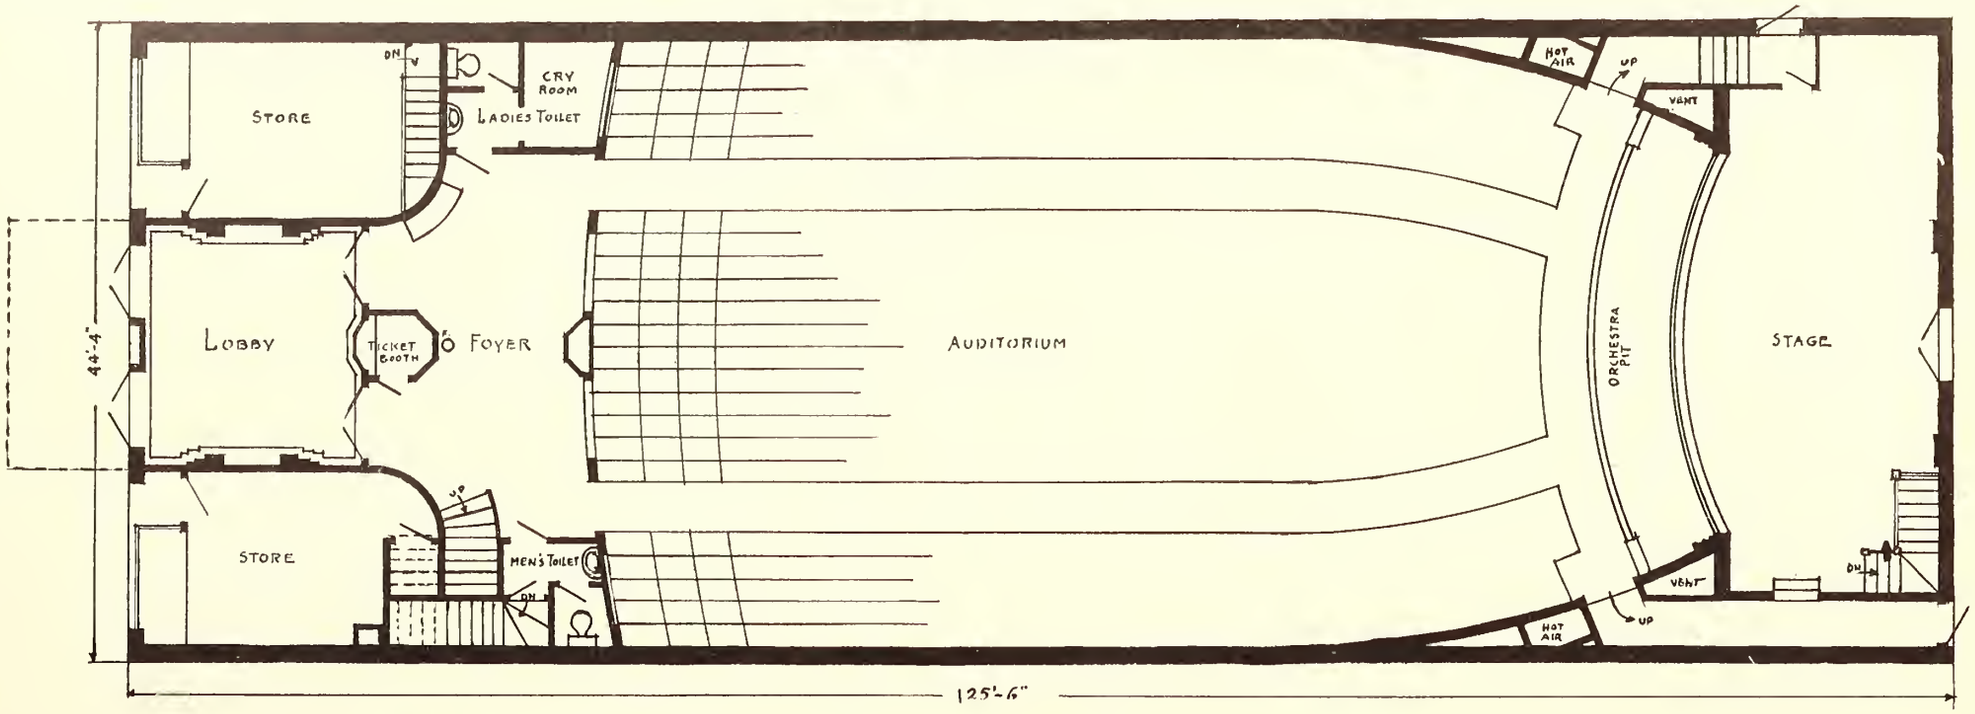
Right: Detailed view of the wall treatment of the auditorium, done in acoustical tile surrounding panels draped with a cloth material.

Upper view: The auditorium, showing the full effect of the panel treatment, cove lighting and proscenium and stage decorations.

Lower view: Corner of the foyer. The staircase leads to the small balcony, projection room and theatre offices on the upper level.

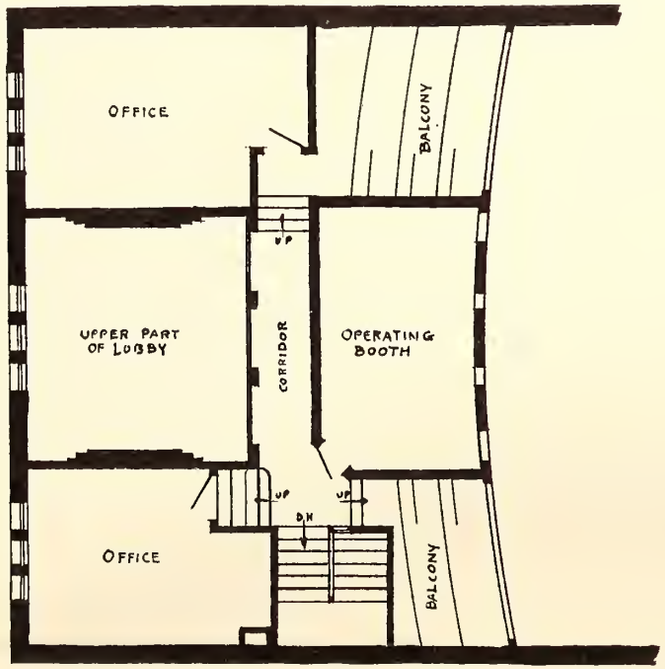
THE Ord theatre, recently opened in Ord, Neb., by M. Biemond of Loup City, Neb., has a number of features that are instructive to those interested in the creation of the small theatre. For one thing, in it has been attained considerable decorative effect without the use of much material, and also without recourse to period design and embellishment. For another, the total cost of construction (which amount, of course, does not include equipment) was kept down to $25,000. The architect was H. A. Raapke of Omaha.

The Ord really seats 568, but 539 of these are on the main floor. It is therefore practically a single-floor house, only 29 chairs being located in small balconies located to the left and right of the projction room. Seating is by American Seating Company.



The length of the building, which is largely taken up by the auditorium, makes the latter decidedly rectangular. The bulding is approximately 125 feet deep, and 44 feet wide. The front portion is occupied by the lobby with two shops on either side, a small foyer and, off the sides of the latter, a men's and a women's retiring room. Adjoining the women's room is a "cry room" where mothers may take unhappy youngsters until they become quieted.

To the rear, on the main floor level, is a stage and orchestra pit. The upper floor, amounting structurally to a mezzanine, contains, besides the small balconies previously referred to, two offices, which are divided by the upper reaches of the lobby; the projection room and a small corridor leading to these divisions.



The architecture and decorative scheme throughout the building is of modernistic pattern, carried out very simply with few purely decorative features. The facade is of buff-colored brick with a modernistic pattern woven in black brick and sandstone. The sidewalk has been done in a spider-web design with black and gray cement.

The lobby has a black cement floor and a ceiling of silver and blue arranged in steps. At either side of the lobby is a fireplace which, designed modernistically in vertical panels, further carry out the architectural motif with a feature that has the utilitarian function of acting as ducts for hot air. On the mantle of each fireplace is a mirror of geometric cut.

A BRITISH INTERPRETATION OF MODERNISM

By W. H. MOORING

Not only is the Sheen theatre notable for its challenge to the conservatism of its part of London. Rather it challenges all conservative Architecture

A TRIUMPH of originality for both architect and decorative artist has been achieved at Sheen, Surrey, one of the better class outlying suburbs of London, located on the Upper Reaches of the Thames. It is known as the Sheen and is an example of modernism in architecture designed by J. R. Leathart of Leathart and Granger, Adelphi, London.

The Sheen is nowhere on a par with recently erected supers in point of size, but it is unique among the few "intimate" cinemas of London, and is the first attempt at building the theatre superb in a somewhat austere suburban location. The promoters—a private syndicate—asked Mr. Leathart to give them something striking in exterior design which at the same time could accommodate, as part of the scheme, a large neon sign bearing the name of the place. (Reference to the picture of the facade will show how he contrived this effect.)

Centrally in the front elevation is provided a bay 23 feet high, which is glazed to serve as lighting for the upper foyer. Vertical facings on either side are used to emphasize the effect of height, and then they turn sharply on the horizontal, creating the impression of a gigantic letter T. The neon sign is introduced as a front facet to the bay.

Plain brickwork with squat windows are introduced on either side of the central elevation, and horizontal stonework facings on the lower floor frontage have their complement in similar tracings along the roof level. Biscuit-colored polychrome faience has been chosen for the facade, while the vertical tracings and minor decorations are in jade green. The interior throughout is remarkable for the utter sevtirely upon the unique ceiling formation.

Starting with the entrance foyer one is impressed by the sheer beauty of line, any attempt at enrichment of which would surely have failed. The only attempt at emotional appeal comes via numerous illuminated wall surfaces. Even the flooring in the entrance hall, usually an object of bizarre treatment, is perfectly plain save for a restrained centerpiece in cubistic design. The foyer walls are light beige, and the ceilings a soft rose. Doors are colored black, silver and cobalt-green. The whole atmosphere is one of expression in design of basic functions.

THE AUDITORIUM has been decorated in a similarly simple manner. Decorative effect depends almost entirely upon the unique eciling formation. The raking ceiling is divided into 10 transverse lighting troughs, which conceal mobile lighting apparatus. The appearance is one of the ribs of a gigantic colored sunshade torn from its centerpiece and spread with ribs parallel across the ceiling.

Upper view: Section of the foyer, showing stairs leading to main floor entrance, and to their left, the box office—located well inside the theatre.

Lower view: Another foyer section, showing the decorative use of simple horizontal line, in wall panels, cornice and window bars, surfaces being plain.

From this overhead source, the main lighting effects are obtained, the only subsidiary forms of illumination being by way of lighted wall panels and additional coves contrived near the vertical mouldings, which form part of, and merge with, the proscenium arch.

The auditorium walls are treated with plastic paint in which buff and matte silver effects predominate. Color is introduced mainly by way of the floods, green, red and blue alternating. The only attempt at color motifs is conveyed in small leaf decorations in orange, peacock blue, and silver, which are sparingly employed to accentuate the line of the ceiling coves, and vertical wall mouldings.

Seating and furnishing throughout is in dark green.

The design of the auditorium was directly influenced by the acoustical requirements. Both walls and ceilings were designed to have a resonant effect. Absorption is at the rear wall. Then, too, the ceiling inclines in a plane parallel to the floor, giving more than the usual height at the rear of the balcony and a lesser amount toward the proscenium, where it is not needed. This acts to decrease the volume of the room, which is placed at approximately 154 cubic feet per seat. The reverberation coefficients have been computed to be two seconds for an empty house, one second for capacity. Two other important effects of the acoustical considerations are reflected in the balcony parapet and the walls. The parapet, instead of being constructed in a curve, is brought forward at the sides in a series of planes—a stepped formation arranged horizontally. And the walls are splayed. Walls, floor and ceiling give the room a shape similar to that of a radio loud speaker.

A structural, as well as a decorative, innovation in the Sheen is the absence of a true proscenium frame. The stage opening is really a space left open where the ceiling ends, instead of being itself an essential element from which the forward wall takes its form.

England has had its unusual architectural and interior treatments, but never before has a design attempted so frankly a decided cleavage from orthodox practices. The Sheen is creating comment, and from this it is logical to expect encouragement of that originality which leads to a conception of design based on the purpose of the cinema rather than on pretty fancies.

Upper view: The auditorium as seen from the balcony. Here is clearly shown the independence of the stage opening from any true arch feature.

Lower view: Another glimpse of the auditorium, this one revealing the unbroken wall surfaces done in plastic paint of buff and silver matte effect.

FEATURING THE ORGAN WITH LIGHT EFFECTS

a method of dramatizing the instrument itself

By SHEPHERD BRINCKLEY

IN MOST theatres up to the present time it has been the custom to place the organ mechanism in a concealed position in back of, or beside the stage, and to have only the small control console in sight of the audience. With such systems the organ pipes have been placed entirely out of sight in back of ornamental grille work or other sound-permeable structure. It has also been the custom in many theatres and similar auditoriums to arrange the console on a vertically movable platform or elevator so that it can be raised to the level of the main floor of the auditorium and lowered out of view. As workable as this scheme is, it seems to me forgetful of a certain interest in the dynamics of the organ itself.

It probably is true that for sake of pure music, the patron need be conscious of only the sound. But of course in the theatre, the organ is scarcely so restricted. All kinds of "stunts" are used which have little relationship to music, but they do increase the power of the organ to entertain and are therefore valuable to the organ as it is used in the theatre. The "stunt" of exposing certain working parts of the organ itself and using colored illumination to point them up when they are in prominent operation during play, should have the same kind of interest as other devices used by organists and really does have some interpretative relationship to the music itself.

I HAVE worked out a system of accomplishing this very thing without much expense or difficulty. Certain parts of the organ are placed on an elevator or vertically movable platform, so that they can be raised from a position below the floor of the auditorium to a position in full view of the audience. The sound producing elements of the organ, such as the pipes, would be in full view of the audience and upon them would be cast illuminating effects responsive to the operation of the keys or stops on the organ console.

These illuminating effects may be the form of colored light beams, which are caused to flood that portion of the sound producing mechanism which is at the time in operation. The energizing circuits of the lights producing these effects may be so arranged as to be controlled by the keys or stops on the organ console, which actuate the sound producing elements. Preferably, means is provided so that the brilliancy of the lighting effect varies with respect to the sound being produced by that portion of the organ. Instead of having the lighting effect controlled by the keys or stops on the organ console, they may be controlled by sound or vibration responsive means placed adjacent to the portion of the sound producing mechanism with which they are associated. These vibrations or sound responsive means should be arranged to vary the illuminating effect of the lighting devices, for example, by modulating the energizing current supplied to them.

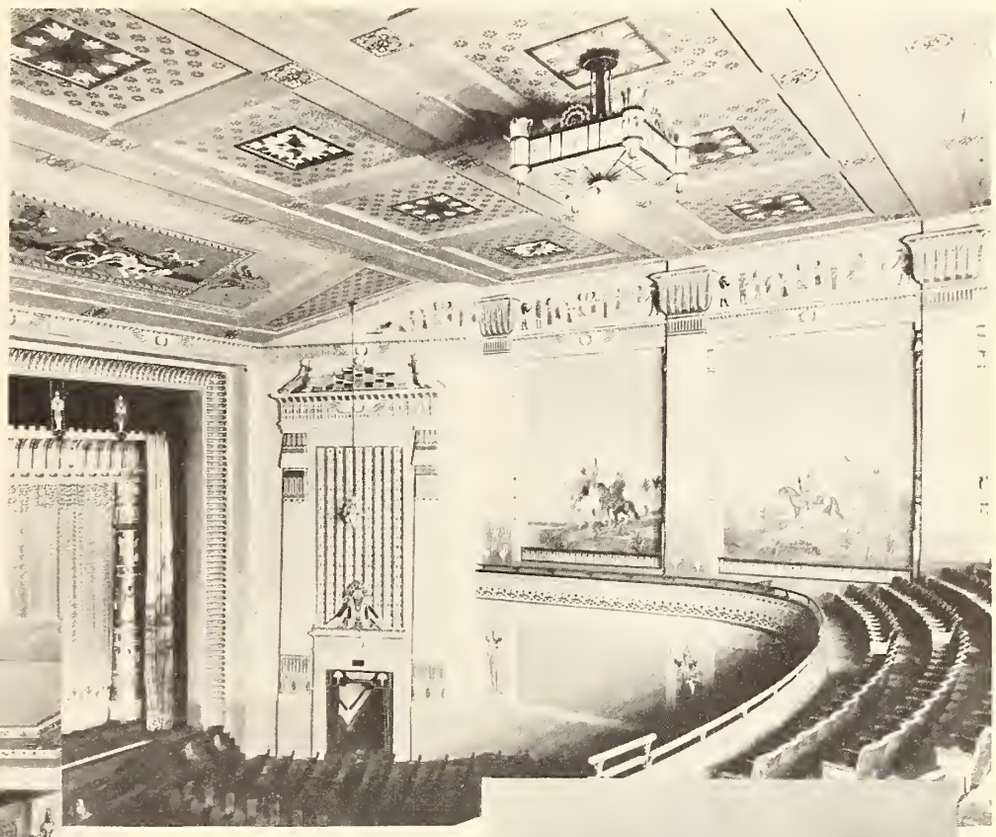
Another object of the scheme is the division of an organ installation into a movable sound producing unit and a stationary power unit containing the air blower and other necessary apparatus, these two portions being coupled by suitable flexible connections through which the compressed air may be carried.

A SOUNDPROOF cabinet is constructed having a glass front in back of which are placed the organ pipes or other sound producing means. For controlling the volume of sound issuing from the cabinet, shutters constructed in the usual manner are furnished. These shutters may be placed at the side or the top. Any well known mechanism may be furnished for operating them. In order that the shutters may not be visible to the audience, the glass panel should extend only high enough to show the sound producing elements. The shutters may be covered by ornamental grille work or other suitable sound-permeable means. The cabinet is supported by a vertically movable platform or elevator which may be of the hydraulic type, or of any suitable kind well known to the art.

A series of illuminating devices such as flood lights are placed where they will produce a pleasing illuminating effect when they are in operation. I prefer to conceal them back of a panel and arrange them to project light downwardly over that section of pipe with which they are associated. Two banks of these lights may be used, one at the top and one at the bottom of the cabinet, and they may be energized either separately or in unison. The operation of these lights is controlled by means which will be disclosed in a moment.

The stationary unit includes the air compressor, or blower, and other accessories necessary to the operation of the organ. This unit is coupled to the moving cabinet by a flexible coupling. This coupling may include an air hose and any other necessary connections. By this arrangement all of the apparatus which is heavy and cumbersome or likely to produce undesirable noise, is located at some stationary point such as the basement of the auditorium, and the sound producing element is left free to move. The console, or control board, of the element may be located on a separate elevator platform and coupled to the organ mechanism by a cable in the usual manner.

THE FLOOD LIGHTS or other illuminating devices are arranged at the top and bottom of the cabinet in such manner as to be out of sight and yet throw the light on the associated organ pipes or other sound device. This light may be of any suitable type adapted to produce pleasing color effects. There is a circuit arrangement for controlling the lights, in which each light is connected by wires with a controller coupled to a vibration or sound responsive device. This device, which may be a microphone or vibrating reed circuit-controlling device, is located in proximity to the organ pipe, or group of pipes, with which the corresponding light is associated.



The arrangement of the parts is such that the sound or vibrations produced by the pipe energize the device, which in turn Always important, it is today even more necessary that the theatre manager know at least the fundamentals of theatre technics and that he know all possible about theatre economics. For this new day's manager, as well as for his projectionists and sound technicians, has the series been prepared that starts in this issue — "What the Manager Should Know About Sound." Describing the period decorative design of the 2,000-seat Bliss theatre, neighborhood house in a New York section.

THE BLISS theatre in the Woodside section of New York City, one of the latest additions to the Century circuit, seats 2,000 and has been designed in a modern interpretation of Egyptian architectural motifs, executed with simplicity, refinement and dignity. Both interior and exterior designs are by William Rau of the Rau Studios, New York. Thomas R. Short was structural architect, and Theresa Jackson made the furniture selections used to complete the scheme and preserve the general motivating treatment embodied in the architecture. A. H. Schwartz of the Homack Construction Company supervised the actual construction of the theatre building.

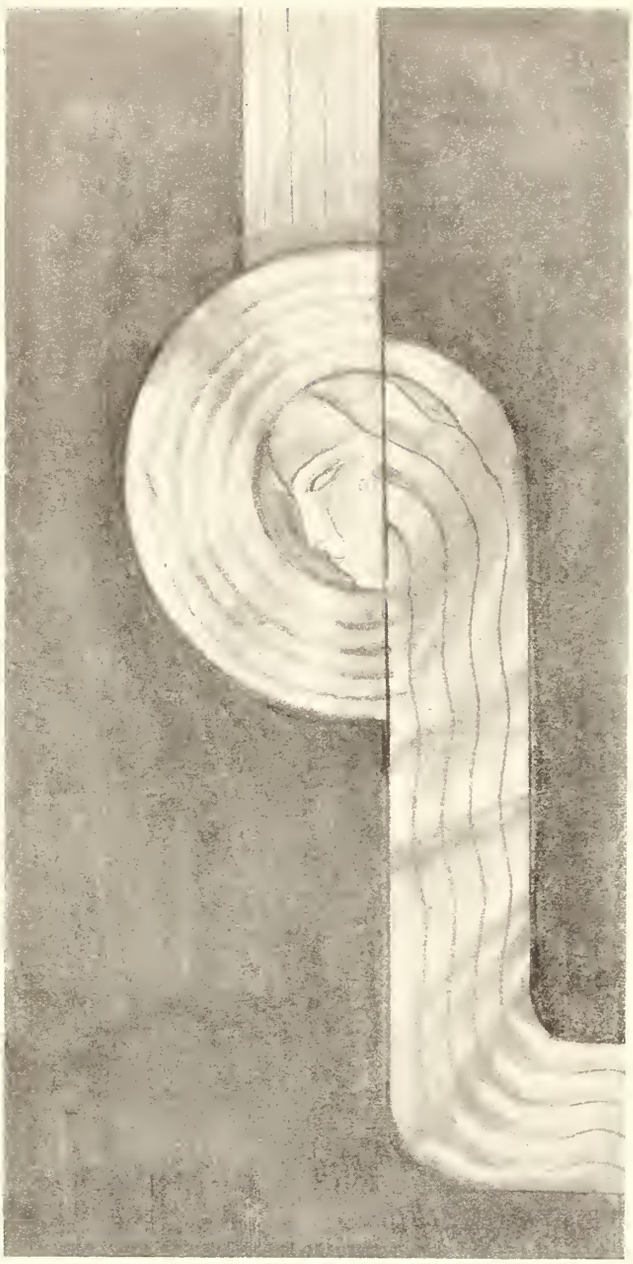
Each individual detail of the design and interior fittings was chosen not for itself but as an adjunct to the main idea. Thus each piece takes its place in the finished product as a supplement to every other.

The Carrier cooling system, provision for wide screen and, of course, sound apparatus, are included in the equipment.

In place of the orchestra pit, the Bliss treatment employs a stairway effect decorated with statues of the golden sphinx. A soft neutral cream coloring is used for the background of the entire auditorium, while in decidedly effective contrast, the ceiling is treated with bold tones in a stone effect to simulate tile inserts.

A parade of unconventional Egyptian figures in flat angular forms composes a frieze running around the entire walls, while a painted decoration with an Egyptian chariot as the central motif embellishes the wall space above the proscenium arch. Mural paintings of historical Egyptian subjects adorn the side walls. The lower side walls are decorated with smaller stenciled designs between the pilasters.

Walnut wood is used for the standee partition back of the orchestra and is constructed in such a manner that it may at any time be closed off to reduce reverberation when patrons are few. An Egyptian red is the dominating color in the carpets and seats.



A square central fixture made to harmonize with the square ceiling panels is used for full house illumination. When full lighting is unnecessary, a soft blue light is thrown over the organ loft and from the crowned head of the figures there.

The lounge has rather plain walls and ceiling, but is richly furnished.

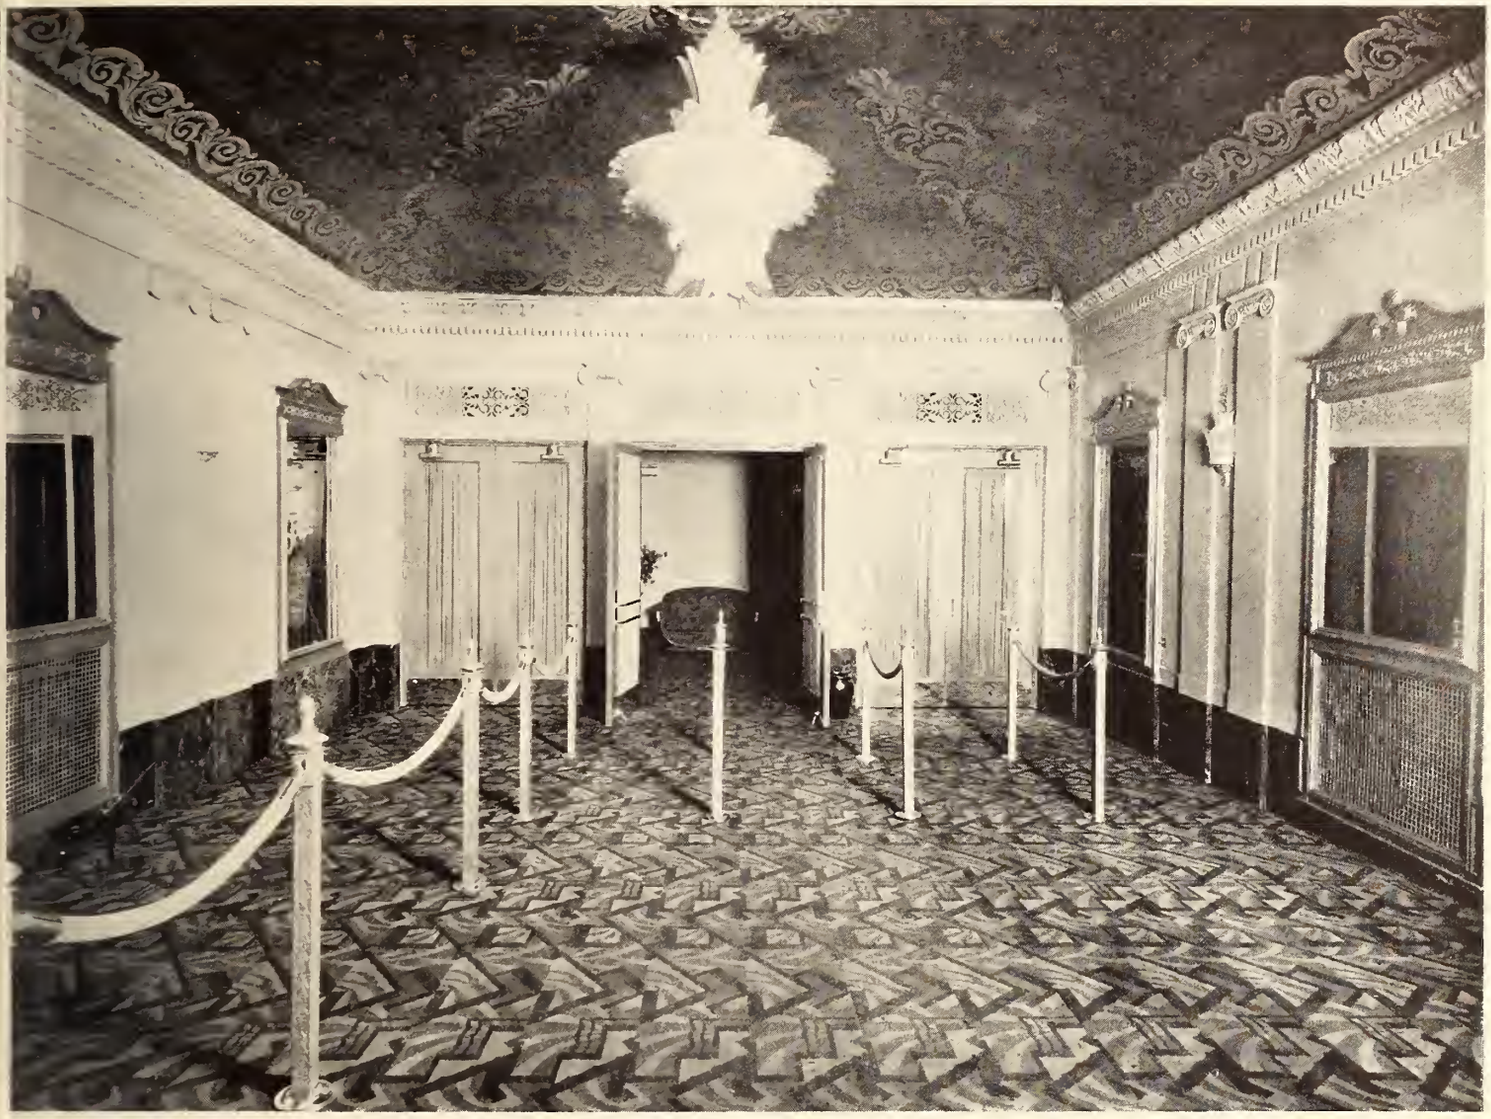
A New Paramount Theatre in Dixie

with 1,200 seats in a stadium-type auditorium

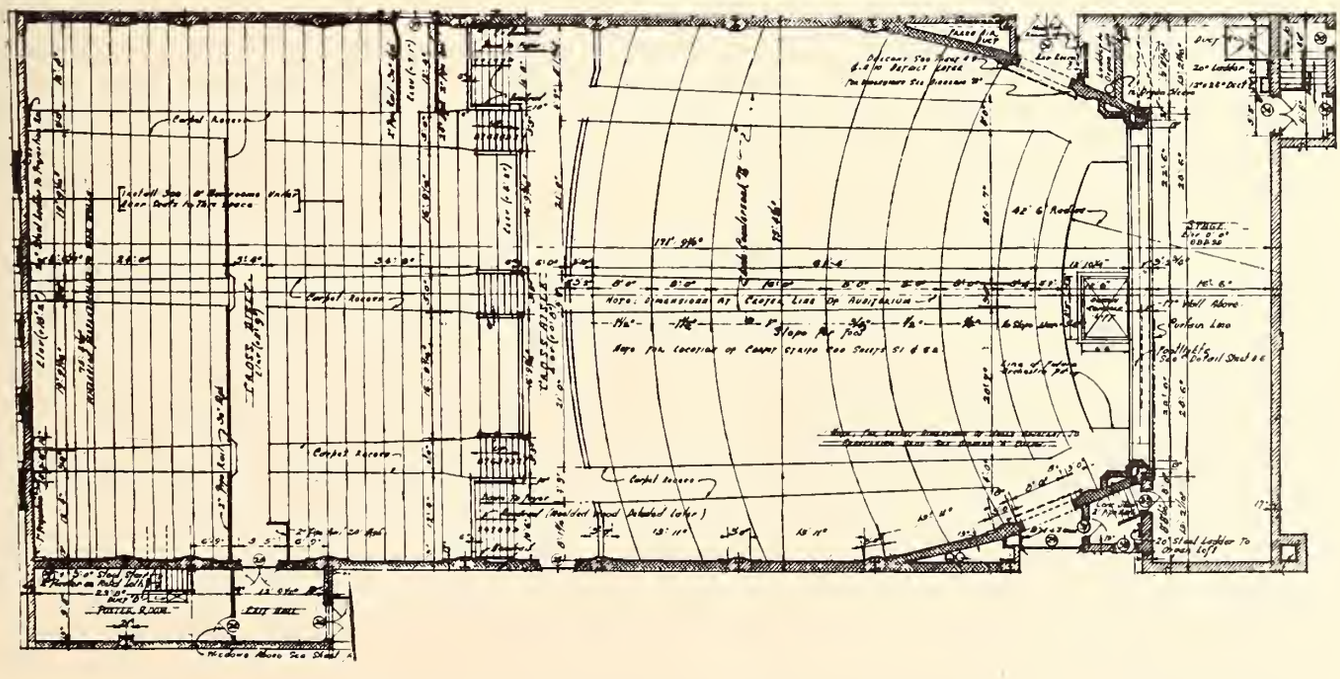
THE PARAMOUNT in Lynchburg, Va., one of the latest in the South, is characterized chiefly by its substantial construction, inside and out, without the sacrifice of its general appearance as a piece of architecture worthy of an important place among the structures of the city.

The construction material is for the most part steel, concrete, stone and marble, plus the additional necessary materials for theatre decoration. Declares W. S. McDonald of the architects, McDonald & Company of Atlanta, Ga., "there is not sufficient wood on the interior of the building to make a fair size fire in one's back yard."



All partitions are of tile, concrete and brick. The doors and trim are of metal, either steel, tin or bronze, and the floors are of concrete, cement, tile and terrazzo. Automatically controlled doors and windows, fire hose cabinets and automatic sprinklers, add to the concentration of effort to reduce the fire hazard.

The walls of the auditorium have been treated with acoustics correction material. Conveniences and contributions to the general comfort of the patron include drinking fountains, lounges, cosmetic facilities for the women and so on.



The Paramount is electrically equipped to take care of any type of stage or screen entertainment, with a four-color range.

Seats are well spaced to provide easy access, and are constructed with upholstery on front and back. The house is designed for comfortable atmospheric conditions either summer or winter, being equipped with heating, refrigerating and ventilating plant, automatically and thermostatically controlled for any desired degree of temperature. All air injected into the theatre is filtered and washed for dust and germs and circulated by a machine with a capacity of 33,000 cubic feet per minute. For cooling, there is installed an ice plant with a generating capacity of 103 tons. When the outside temperature is 20°, the inside temperature can be regulated to any degree above 70°. At 96° outside, inside temperature can be kept at 70°.

The exceptional manner in which the patron's comfort, convenience and safety have been provided for in the construction of the Paramount, has done nothing to detract from the distinctively neat exterior and interior appearance of the entire theatre. The auditorium is of the stadium type, seating approximately 1,200. Decorative treatment consists in paneled walls, stenciled in brilliant colors.

LEGAL ASPECTS OF THEATRE MANAGEMENT

late decisions of common application

By LEO T. PARKER

IN ORDER THAT a state law is valid which restricts the operation of theatres, it must be shown, first, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the law is reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the intended purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. In other words, the legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business, or impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations. Moreover, a law which is discriminatory is void.

SUNDAY CLOSING LAWS

For instance, in City of Alexandria vs. Hall, (131 So. 722), a state passed a law which required the owners of one certain class of business to close on Sunday. In holding this law, the court made these observations:

"The act affects one class and one class alone. The merchant and his clerks, the restaurant with its employes, the clothing house, the blacksmith, the livery stable, the street car lines, and the people engaged in every other branch of business, are each and all allowed to open their respective places of business on Sunday, and transact their ordinary business if they desire. . . . No reason has been or can be shown why the followers of one useful and unobjectionable employment should be debarred from the right to labor upon certain days, and others in like classes of employment be not so debarred. . . . When any one such class is singled out and put under the criminal ban of a law such as this, the law not only is special, unjust, and unreasonable in its operation, but it works an invasion of individual liberty."

On the other hand, various courts have held that any person who violates a valid Sunday closing law may be convicted although his religion sets aside another day, besides the usual Sunday, for the day of rest. For example, in State vs. Haining (293 Pac. 952), it was shown that a state law provides:

"Every person who shall sell or expose to sale any goods, wares or merchandise, or shall keep open any grocery, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not exceeding fifty dollars."

The owner of a motion picture theatre operated it on Sunday and he was convicted by the lower court of violating the above mentioned state law. The theatre owner appealed to the higher court and contended (1) that the law is unconstitutional, in that it deprives him of rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the State of Kansas and the Constitution of the United States; and (2) that the facts alleged do not constitute a sale of goods, wares or merchandise as contemplated by the law. Also, the theatre owner contended that since his religion defined another day as the day of rest, he should be permitted to operate his theatre on the regular Sunday. However, the higher court sustained the lower court's decision and held the theatre owner liable for violating the statute, saying:

"Section 1 of the Bill of Rights reads: 'All men are possessed of equal and inalienable natural rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' . . . We are unable to see how the statute in question violates this constitutional provision. . . . Statutes making it an offense to sell or expose for sale goods, wares or merchandise on Sunday, with exceptions as to drugs, provisions, or articles of immediate necessity, have been adopted in most of the states. Such statutes are not void because they do not exempt from their operation Seventh Day Adventists or others who worship on some day of the week other than Sunday."

Also, in another leading higher court case, State vs. Blair (288 Pac. 729), the higher court held the sale of tickets to a theatre legally is a sale of goods, wares or merchandise.

MANAGER'S SIGNATURE

IT IS good policy always that a manager who signs an agreement include in the body of the contract the name of his employer, otherwise the manager may be held personally liable. Of course, if the evidence indicates that the manager intended to sign the contract in his managerial capacity, the employer is obligated.

For illustration, in Williams vs. Carnation Company (287 Pac. 50), it was disclosed that a manager signed a note without including the name of his employer. However, it was understood that the employer and not the manager was to be liable. Later the holder of the note attempted to collect the amount of the same from the manager. However, the higher court held the employer was liable, saying:

"The fact that this contract was 'accepted' by the company's manager without adding after his signature words indicating his representative capacity does not, when considered together with all the other facts shown by the record, require a holding that the loan was not made to the company."

EVIDENCE IN ARSON

GENERALLY speaking, in order to convict a person accused of arson, there must be proof of circumstances from which the jury will be authorized to decide that the fire was of incendiary origin. Both the incendiary origin of the fire and the guilt of the accused may be established by circumstantial evidence. The truth of the testimony and the reasonableness of the inferences to be drawn therefrom are exclusively for the jury.

For instance, in State vs. Berkowitz (29 S. W. [2d] 150), it was disclosed that a person named Berkowitz had an insurance policy for $2,000 issued on March 5th. On March 23rd, another $1,000 policy of insurance was issued to him. A fire occurred on the night of April 29th. Evidence was offered at the trial showing the following facts:

Two policemen were walking their beat quite near Berkowitz' premises at about 10:30 p.m., when an explosion was heard. By the time they could turn and look flames were shooting out of the front of the structure. The fire department was summoned immediately and arrived promptly. It was then found that the fire was general on the first floor and stairway and had spread to the second floor. The blaze was soon extinguished. The fire was burning furiously when first discovered and the odor of gasoline was quite noticeable. In view of this testimony the higher court held Berkowitz guilty of the crime of arson, saying:

"The fire started in premises occupied and entirely controlled by defendant. It was under full headway when discovered. The odor of gasoline was then plainly noticeable and gasoline was found conveniently placed on the second floor, although it fortunately had not ignited."

SOUND IN THE THEATRE

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

By A THEATRE SOUND ENGINEER*

II
What the Apparatus Does and Why

This is the first of a series of articles designed to meet the increasing need of theatre managers for knowledge enabling them to be better judges of the quality of their entertainment, of the requirements of their projection department, and of equipment and supplies that they may be called upon from time to time to purchase. The second article will appear in the June 6th issue.

IT MAY fairly be said that one of the strongest assets a theatre can have today is a manager thoroughly familiar with sound. Such a manager can do more than provide his audience with a better show. He can provide it at a substantial saving in cost.

The first rush was to secure sound at any price. That excitement resulted in neglect of many opportunities for economy. The frantic pace has now subsided. The overlooked opportunities are now being sought out with microscopic diligence. Large theatre chains maintain technical staffs to do this. The small chains and the individual theatre cannot afford that (although any group of ten or more theatres should profit greatly by the addition to their payroll of a competent technician). But the smaller groups and individual houses can achieve a very good second-best if the manager is tolerably familiar with the requirements of sound systems.

Modernization

Prominent among steps of modernization are those concerned with the use of storage batteries. The batteries supplied with the earlier sound systems had an anticipated life of two years, in many cases. The time for replacement of these is now at hand, or approaching rapidly. Batteries of longer life and battery substitutes of various kinds are now being widely used. The aggregate savings are impressive, but the necessity for accurate knowledge in selecting a method of battery replacement is great. It is not enough to know which of the many methods offered will give satisfactory sound. There is also the question of the method among those that give satisfactory sound, as to which will be most economical in the case of any individual theatre.

Exactly the same considerations apply to all the many steps of modernization now being undertaken in theatres of the most diverse requirements and equipped with widely different types of equipment.

Supplies

The economies effected in the purchase of sound supplies are mounting daily. In this work, also, the large chains are naturally taking the lead. In this work, also, knowledge is necessary for intelligent selection. Purchase of a cheaper part which will break down and stop a show is false economy. But informed purchase of supplies can reduce replacement costs. Many theatres are today abandoning the practice of purchasing all their supplies through the company which installed and services their equipment, in order to take advantage of the prices at which merchandise is offered in the general sound equipment market and in allied fields. Whether or not such a change in policy will prove wisest in the long run is not a matter for discussion here. The thing is being done, and all indications are that it will be done on a still wider scale in the future. The point here is that since it is being done, it should be well done, and once again detailed knowledge is quintessential.

Theatres with that knowledge at their disposal are also improving the quality of their sound, side by side with a reduction of its cost.

In conversation with salesmen, in reading advertising and articles in publications, the manager will find innumerable suggestions for improvement and economy.

II
Technical Considerations

Vibrations That Constitute Sound

SOUND and the electric currents used to represent sound can most easily be understood with the help of a few special words employed in the study of wave motions.

The distance between the crest of one wave and the crest of the next is called the wave-length. Consider the case of a sea wall, and waves beating against it. If the waves are approaching at the rate of a hundred feet a minute, and the wave-length, or distance between crests, is ten feet, obviously 10 waves will strike the sea-wall in one minute's time. The frequency with which the waves strike the sea wall is, therefore, ten per minute.

It is customary in connection with sound waves or electric currents to speak of one complete wave, crest and trough, as one cycle of wave motion. An alternation is half a cycle—that is, a complete crest, or a complete trough. One cycle is equal to two alternations. Returning to the case of the sea-wall, the frequency of the ocean waves striking it can also be expressed as 10 cycles, or as 20 alternations, per minute.

If the waves moved at a rate of 200 feet in wave-length, their frequency would be 20 cycles. If they moved at the rate of 200 feet per minute, and were only five feet in wave-length, their frequency would be 40 cycles. While their speed remains constant, it is obvious, wave-length and frequency are only two different ways of expressing the same thing. Divide the speed of the wave motion by either, and the result is the other.

Sound waves are slightly different from waves of water. Water has a surface, the air through which sound most commonly travels has none. A complete cycle of sound consists of an area of condensed air followed by an area of rarified air. If the center of the area of condensed air be regarded as a crest, and the center of the area of rarified air be regarded as the bottom of a trough, all the considerations thus far mentioned as applying to waves of water apply also to waves of sound.

The lowest frequency of sound the human ear can detect is about 16 cycles. Sound waves travel through air at, very roughly, 1,000 feet per minute. The wave-length of 16-cycle sound is therefore about 60 feet. The highest frequency audible to the human ear is about 16,000 cycles, the wave-length of which is one inch. A good theatre sound system will have a range of from not less than 60, to not more than 6,000 cycles, or from about 16 feet to two inches. The speaking voice, male and female, has a fundamental frequency, or pitch, of between 128 and 256 cycles, or from about 4 to 8 feet in wave-length.

The word "fundamental," printed in italics above, is important. It relates to phenomena in sound and electrical waves which have no exact parallel in the waves of the sea. The little ripples that play over the surface of the large combers of the ocean are unrelated to those larger waves. Sound and electrical waves are also accompanied by little ripples, in most cases, and these may be directly related to the larger wave. These ripples are called "harmonics," the wave itself is the fundamental. The harmonic, or "overtone," is a wave whose length is a common fraction of the wave-length of the fundamental. It is the overtones that distinguish one voice from another, that distinguish a note played on the piano from the same note played by a violin.

Returning to the case of a sea-wall, the waves striking it are reflected backward. This phenomenon can most easily be observed by creating a ripple in a bathtub, where there are no winds, tides or currents to introduce complications. In the bathtub, also, it can be observed that a ripple striking the side of the tub at a slant will be reflected in the same way that a beam of light is reflected from a mirror placed a-slant—at the equal but complementary angle.

The following likewise can be observed most easily in a bathtub: The sides of the tub, a slab of wood, or any object as large as the wave-length of the ripple, or larger, will reflect that ripple, but an object smaller than the wave-length of the ripple will not create any noticeable reflection. The flat side of a bar of soap will occasion markedly greater reflection than the narrow edge.

Sound waves striking surfaces larger in area than their own wave-length are reflected, and may reappear in the theatre as echo, but sound waves encountering surfaces smaller than their own wave-length are broken up in the course of reflection. They can appear as reverberation only, and as reverberation less intense than that occasioned by a large surface. Consequently breaking up hard walls and ceilings into relatively small areas by coffering is one remedy for reverberation and echo.

Electrical Vibrations

All the considerations which have been here reviewed, apply, in greater or lesser degree, to the electric currents used to represent sound.

An alternating current is one which flows in both directions alternately. Consider any one point in a wire carrying such current. The current flow, in any one direction, increases from zero to maximum, and decreases again, through zero, to maximum current flowing in the opposite direction. The change from zero to zero is equal to one alternation. That from zero, through zero, and back again to zero after the current has reversed direction, is equal to one cycle. Alternating currents are seldom spoken of as having wave-lengths, the term frequency being used almost exclusively. The frequency, in cycles per second, is the rapidity with which maximum flow, in the same direction, reproduces itself. An alternation, therefore, is the time between maximum flow in one direction and maximum flow in the opposite direction. A cycle is the time from maximum flow in one direction, through maximum flow in the opposite direction, and back to maximum flow in the original direction.

Currents for supplying power are commonly of 50 or 60 cycles, occasionally of 25 cycles. Currents representing transmitted sound are of the same frequencies as those sounds—commercially, from about 60, to not more than 6,000 cycles. Harmonics or overtones present in the original sound must be reproduced in the currents representing that sound.

Some Electrical Apparatus

If a giant were to stand in the ocean with a great bucket, catching and scooping up the crest of each wave that came by, and dumping the water back into the trough, there would be no more waves. The waves would be "smoothed out." If the giant were a mechanical robot, moving at a fixed speed, he could smoothen out and abolish waves of only one frequency. Waves of all other frequencies would get by him to a greater or lesser extent, for he would scoop up a crest sometimes, and a trough at other times, while at still other times he would dip or pour between the crest and the trough. An electrical condenser is a device that absorbs current from the line at some times, and returns it at others. An inductance is a device that does the same thing, using a different means. Condensers and inductances are used alone or in combination as "wave traps," more commonly called filters, equalizers or compensators. They can be constructed to smoothen out, and therefore to eliminate, any frequency or band of frequencies. Space does not permit a description, here, either of their construction or the theory of their functioning, but this should suffice for our purpose.

Direct Current

At this point it will be as well to abandon the analogy of sea-waves and sea-walls in considering electrical phenomena Clarity perhaps may be gained by reverting, for the present, to a discussion of direct currents, which flow through their wires simply and sanely, in one direction only, like water through a pipe—or, for a much more accurate analogy, like steam.

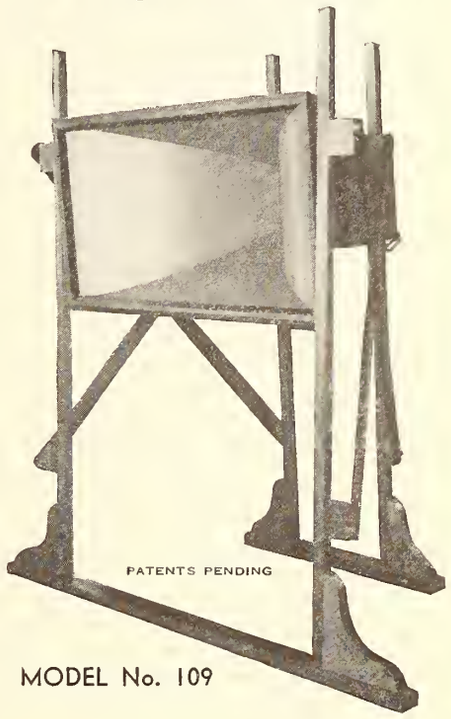
Steam in a boiler consists of a great many molecules—extremely small particles—in a state of furious motion. These particles are forever colliding with each other, and with the boiler which confines them. The mass effect of innumerable collisions per second against the walls of the boiler, is that of pressure. If a way is opened out of the boiler, the pressure will be diminished according to the number of steam molecules withdrawn. The number of molecules—the amount of steam—flowing through any pipe will depend upon the size of the pipe, and upon the pressure of the boiler behind it.

Electric currents are supposed to consist in particles much smaller even than molecules, which are called electrons. The molecule itself, composed of electrons, is thought to be the fundamental brick out of which all physical matter is built. The difference between iron and copper is a difference in the number and arrangement of the electrons in the atoms of each. Under suitable conditions an electron can be added to, or subtracted from, an atom.

Given an accumulation of electrons, the conditions of a steam boiler are duplicated. An electronic pressure exists. This pressure is commonly called voltage, or potential. If a conductor is connected to a source of potential, current will flow along that conductor, until the electronic pressure is everywhere the same. A battery, for example, creates, by chemical action, a surplus of electrons at its negative pole, and a scarcity of them at its positive pole. If a wire be connected to the negative pole, the surplus electrons will flow into it. If the wire be returned to the positive pole, the electrons will continue to pass through that wire indefinitely, until the voltage of the battery is exhausted.

As in the case of steam, the number of electrons flowing—the amount of current—will depend both upon the potential causing the flow, and upon the capacity—or resistance—of the wire.

In the case of alternating current, the potential, like the current, continuously reverses its direction. Alternating current generators are machines designed to create an electrical pressure which reverses its direction. Direct current generators create pressure—and therefore current—in one direction only.



Tubes and Photocells

The electrons composing many physical substances can be detached from their combinations by heat. These electrons are always negative, and when free from atomic combinations, they constitute a negative electrical charge. They are attracted—since opposite charges attract—to any positive electrical charge. Electrons are released from the filament of any electric lamp bulb, but the filaments used in vacuum tubes are coated with materials which give off electrons in greater abundance. A plate sealed into the same vacuum can be positively charged from some external source of potential. The negatives released from the filament are then attracted to the positively charged plate, and thereby constitute a flow of current across the vacuum.

The plate, however, emits no electrons. The current across the vacuum of the tube is therefore always a direct current—flowing in one direction only. If an alternating potential is connected across the tube, no current will flow while the plate is charged by the positive alternation. Current will flow only half the time, but always in the same direction. Such a tube provides a convenient means for converting alternating current into direct current—or, as it is called, "rectifying" alternating current.

In a two-element tube of the type just described, the amount of current flowing will depend upon the potential on the plate, and upon the "internal resistance" of the tube—that is, upon the number of electrons available.

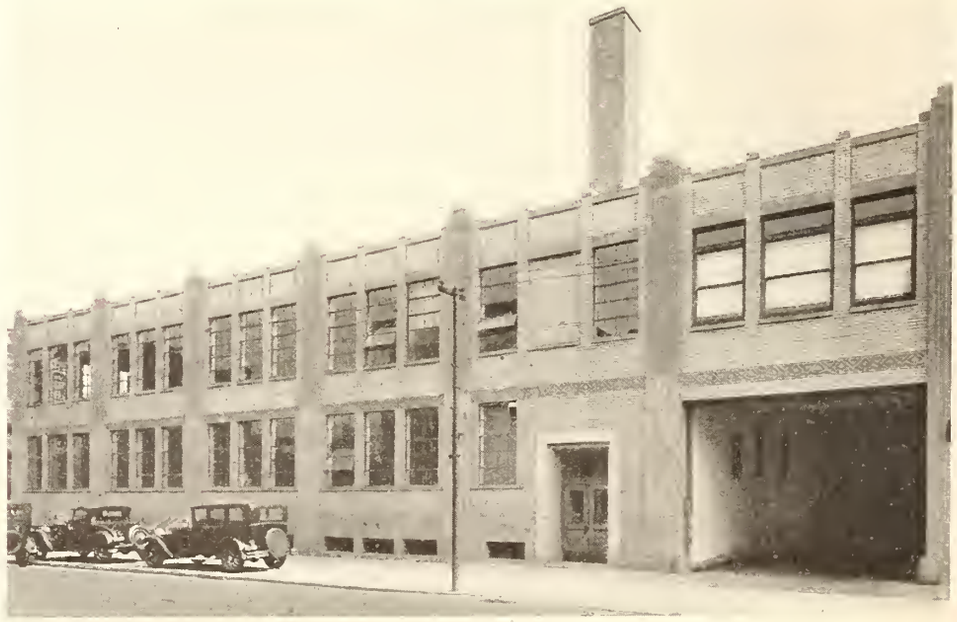
If a third element, called a grid, is sealed into such a tube between the filament and the plate, the tube becomes capable of "amplification." The number of electrons available and the charge on the plate are then no longer the sole determinates of the amount of "space current" flowing through the tube. A charge placed upon the grid will vary the space current profoundly. Speech currents to be amplified are connected to such a grid. Assume the case of a plate current of 10 milliamperes (one one-hundredth of an ampere) and a plate potential of 200 volts. To secure a plate current of 15 mils would require one hundred additional volts on the plate. But if the tube has an "amplification factor" of 10, a 10-volt change in the grid charge will have the same effect.

If there are seven tubes in as many successive stages of amplification, and each has an amplification factor of 10, the total "gain" is 10^7, or 10 with 7 zeros added, or a total gain of 100,000,000.

The photocell "active material" is a substance. There are a number of such substances which release electrons when exposed to light. These electrons are attracted by a positively charged plate. If the plate potential is steady, the photocell current will depend entirely upon the amount of light reaching the active material.

Electricity and Magnetism

Electrons in motion create a magnetic "field." Such a field can be impressed permanently upon steel, nickel and other substances or their alloys. The result in that case is the familiar steel magnet. The field surrounding that magnet is of precisely the same kind as the field which surrounds a wire carrying electric current.



Electrons in motion create a magnetic field— the field, in motion, creates electric current.

If a coil of wire be wrapped around a steel bar and current tuned on, the bar will be magnetized. If the magnetized bar is slipped inside such a coil, the motion of the bar will create current in the wire. If the current through the wire be alternating, the field will reverse its direction with each alternation, and the bar will not be permanently magnetized.

If the bar, after it has been magnetized, is slipped in and out of a coil of wire, an alternating current will be generated in the wire, for the direction of the current will reverse itself with each reversal of the direction of the motion of the bar.

Alternating current generators are built upon this principle. The motion involved is for purposes of mechanical efficiency, a rotary motion, and electro-magnets are used to create a stronger field than could be obtained from magnetized steel. Direct current generators employ a special device known as the commutator. A description of this simple contrivance can be found in any standard electrical text book. Although alternating current is generated in the windings of a direct current generator, the commutator arrangement is such that current actually drawn from it always flows in the same direction.

An electric motor is no more than a generator which is supplied with current.

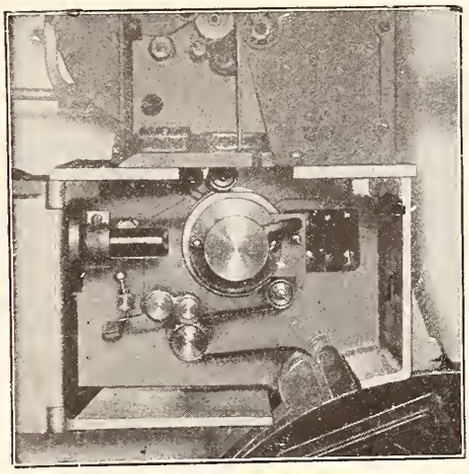
and therefore creates mechanical motion.



The disc reproducer, or pickup, is a small generator. The vibrations of the needle alter the strength of a small magnetic field, and in consequence a current is generated in a small coil.

A transformer may be regarded as a form of generator. It consists of an electro-magnet and a coil of wire. The strength of the magnetic field is not disturbed by physical motion, but by alternation of the strength of the current which creates that field. Transformers are therefore commonly supplied with alternating current. Direct current will not cause them to operate, unless it is "pulsating direct." It is motion in, or of, a magnetic field—some change in the strength of the field, however secured, that generates electricity. If smooth direct current were supplied to the "primary" winding of a transformer, a field would exist, but it would not change in strength and therefore there would be no current generated in the "secondary."

The transformer, supplied with pulsating direct, or with alternating current, transfers this current from one winding to another. It must transfer voltage also, or there would be no power to cause current to flow in the secondary winding. Transformers are commonly called "step-up" or "step-down," referring to voltage. If there are five times as many turns of wire in the secondary winding as in the primary, the voltage is "stepped up" five times. If there are only one-fifth as many turns in the secondary as in the primary, the voltage is "stepped down" to one-fifth of the primary voltage. Whenever voltage is stepped up, current is stepped down accordingly, and vice versa. Transformers are often used to increase voltage. Connected to a 110-volt alternating current line, they will deliver 300, or 750, or 1,500 volts, or whatever voltage may be needed, to supply the plates of the rectifier tubes in a sound system.

It will be remembered that alternating currents, such as those which represent sound, partake of the nature of wave motion. Dropping a stone into a pool of oil will create waves in the oil, just as dropping a stone in a pool of water will create waves in the water. Pouring oil on troubled water "damps out" the waves. Pouring water on a pool of oil would do as much, except for the fact that the water would not stay on top, but sink to the bottom, and waves are a surface phenomenon. Oil on water damps out waves of water because the oil has a different "impedance" to the wave motion from that of water. The wave motion will not pass readily from one medium to another. Neither will alternating current pass readily from one impedance to another.

Those readers who find this very brief outline of sound principles strange to them may perhaps profit by re-reading until its elements become moderately familiar, before attempting to follow the next article, in which an effort will be made to indicate the application of those principles in a practical manner to sound apparatus.

the reproducer that is equal to modern sound recording

Modern recording seems near perfection. Every sound vibration is written accurately on the sound track. Your problem is to choose a reproducer that turns the recording back into sound as accurately as it was recorded.

Syncrofilm does that because it sends four times as much light through the film to the photocell as the ordinary reproducer. You see your shadow more sharply on a sunny day than on a cloudy one. The photocell "sees" the recording plainer in the quadrupled light of Syncrofilm. It "sees" every delicate shading, just as you see your features outlined in exact form.

That is why Syncrofilm gives lifelike voices and full-toned music. That's what people pay for, and they'll keep on paying as long as you give it to them.

The only way you can give it is through Syncrofilm. The sooner you start, the more you will make. Send for the rest of the information. Write or dictate a letter now.

Equipment News and Comment

Conducted by G. J. Reid

PORTABLE APPARATUS

● New portable equipment, invented by Howard Frankel of North Vernon, Ind., and formerly of Cincinnati, has been demonstrated in Cincinnati under the supervision of Ralph Lembeck, cameraman, and Sten. Bartelson, sound engineer of the company, which is as yet unnamed. The apparatus consists of three pieces, including the screen. Packed for travel, the three pieces have a total weight of 185 pounds.

It is intended shortly to conduct an experiment in broadcasting sound from talkers, with the operators of the new equipment working in cooperation with, and under the supervision of, Joseph Chambers, chief engineer of WLW, a 50,000 watt broadcasting station. A talker will be shown in the WLW studios and the sound is to be picked up by the station's amplifiers and transmitted by wire to the broadcasting plant at Mason, O., a distance of 25 miles. If the experiment proves successful, as is now believed, the sound will be given a nation-wide broadcast.

NEW SPEAKER MODEL

● The Wright-DeCoster Company of St. Paul, manufacturers of dynamic reproducers, has developed a new model, No. 109, made especially for reproduction with sound-on-film, though by an adjustment, it can be made to operate equally well, it is said, for sound-on-disc.

The horn has a hardwood interior and a soft insulating exterior. An adjustment on the speaker, which regulates the air pressure on the cone, is designed to make it possible to decrease or increase the low tones.

A shift method for adjusting the horn behind the screen is designed to afford an opportunity to locate the horn where it will give the best results and obviate the danger of the horn being moved out of place. Horn and unit are not sold separately, as the combination is required to give best results.

NEW TYPE AMPLIFIER

● The Operadio Manufacturing Company has brought out a new type 408 portable projector amplifier, AC operated. It is designed especially for use with sound-on-film in conjunction with a photoelectric cell of the caesium type.

New Operadio Amplifier

It need not be operated with a P. E. cell amplifier, for it takes its input energy from the cell. It furnishes the necessary voltage for the P. E. cell, as well as for the filament of the exciter lamp. There are no batteries required. This model is 19 inches wide by 21 inches high by eight inches deep. It may be put in a convenient carrying case, or mounted on a wall of the projection room between the projectors.

THE RCA REPORT

● In the annual report to stockholders from General James G. Harbord, chairman of the board, and David Sarnoff, president, Radio Corporation of America has announced a program for intensive development and the widest diversification practicable in the various fields of radio communication and the electrical entertainment arts.

Gross income of the Radio Corporation of America and its wholly owned subsidiary companies from all sources for the year 1930, was $137,037,596. The net income of the corporation for the year was $5,526,293.

"RCA is ready to begin commercial production of home talking motion picture apparatus as quickly as the necessary associated services are sufficiently developed," the report states. "These include the continuous production of motion pictures to meet home requirements, a system of distribution which eventually may be able to serve 20,000,000 'little theatres' of the home, and technical and industrial development which will bring the cost of film service within the range of the great majority of the public.

"Television has been brought definitely nearer to commercial development by the research and technical progress made by the corporation during 1930."

However, it points out that much research and development is still necessary before practical commercial television is a reality. The company has devoted its efforts to research and the planning of studio arrangements whereby sight transmission could be installed as a separate service of broadcasting.

The company promises the continuation of experimentation in the laboratory during 1931, without attempting to market any such equipment this year. The present progress indicates, the report concludes, that the ultimate practicability of a television service is almost certain.

INPUT POWER CONTROL

● The American Transformer Company of Newark, N. J., has put on the market a manually operated line-voltage control unit designed to maintain the input power to the amplifier constantly at the rated voltage.

The unit is for use in 50/60-cycle circuits, and consists of an adjustable autotransformer with a meter for indicating the voltage supplied to the power circuits of the amplifier. The device is designed to permit of maintaining the voltage at a constant value of 110 or 115 volts, as desired, and may be used where the existing supply is between 90 and 130 volts.

The American power control Type T-750, is housed in a compact sheet metal box designed for wall mounting, requiring a wall space 6¼ inches by 11¼ inches. It has an overall depth of nine inches.

W. E. CAESIUM CELL

● The new 3-A Photoelectric cell, recently brought out by Western Electric, uses caesium as the photo-active element, instead of a preparation of potassium as used in the two earlier cells, which the 3-A cell is designed now to transplant

The caesium oxide is coated on a half-cylindrical electrode and a small vertical rod forms the positive electrode. The former cells employed as the photo-active element a potassium preparation coated on the inside of the bulb, with a ring-shaped member forming the positive electrode.

The metallic filament incandescent exciting lamp light consists of yellow, red and infra-red radiations, there being comparatively little blue or violet radiation.

Sufficient time has not yet elapsed to show what are the ultimate limits of service to be expected from the 3-A cell, but it may be said that whereas the life of the average potassium cell was from nine months to a year, or less if kept in too high a temperature, laboratory tests on the 3-A cell have shown no appreciable deterioration over a period of nine months, whether stored or operated.

ACOUSTICAL MEASURE

● An acoustimeter, manufactured by Burgess-Parr Company of Chicago, according to the specifications of Johns-Manville, has been developed for theatre acoustical analysis.

The acoustimeter records sound measurements in any given place in a way which could be directly correlated to sensations of loudness as perceived by the human ear. Readings are made in terms of decibels, which may be calibrated directly to the scale of loudness of the human ear.

OPTICAL GLASS LINE

● The Fish-Schurman Corporation of New York, distributors of optical lenses and the products of the Schott-Jena glass works, have entered the theatre market as a result of the increased use of optical glass due to sound. The firm also handles optical filter glasses, optical crown glass plates to enclose projection booths, SOG heat resisting optical glass and other glass specialties.

COMPENSATING AMPLIFIER

● Julius G. Aceves, radio engineer, has developed a system of compensated amplification, designed to eliminate undesirable resonance in the mechanical and electrical equipment. Rights have been obtained to the system by the Pacent Electric Company.

VOLUME CONTROL DEVICE

● V. A. Schoenberg of the engineering department of Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, Chicago, writes us with reference to the new light valve volume control developed for the Motiograph sound projector equipment. The light control, he explains, is a means of regulating the sound level by controlling the amount of light falling upon the light sensitive surface of the photoelectric cell, thereby controlling the amount of electrons emitted from the cell. He writes:

"Tests have shown that the number of stages heretofore used can be greatly reduced, also that frequencies never before heard were reproduced in naturalness. The light valve proper consists of a mechanical means for increasing or decreasing the amount of light permitted to fall upon the cell. It is located within the sound aperture block and controlled at the machine proper. The control dial is over a range of 180° graduated in a series of 15 steps. Its action permits an exceptionally even, smooth change which is gradual and not in steps of several D.B.'s, which feature makes sound regulation ideal.

"Sound regulation by means of electronic emission control is the most logical position whereby sound reproduction should be regulated, as it eliminates from the audio circuit such devices as pads, faders and the like, also permits the reduction in the number of stages required, the sound reproduction then is equal to that of amplifiers, speakers, and slit adjustment, whatever is recorded on the film, whether it be variable area or variable density, it will be reproduced in accordance with the frequency response of the above mentioned equipment.

"Its use permits all stages of amplification to operate at an equal proportional amount, thereby overcoming the possibility of some stages, such as are in the head or pre-amplifier, being crowded and then having its output reduced to a suitable level so as not to over-modulate the first stages of the power amplifier. Usually the output of some head amplifiers is far in excess as to the required amount for the input of the power amplifier. In such cases pads and the fader are used acting as a dam and used also to regulate the input to the power amplifier for sound regulation. By eliminating such device and regulating the amount of input to the head amplifier instead of regulating the output of head amplifier. It can readily be seen that the proper and only practical way of presenting sound as recorded is to regulate and control it at the cell proper.

"Sound changeover is accomplished by means of 4 and 3-way switch wired in the 500 ohm output circuits of the head amplifiers. These switches are placed in convenient location in the booth. The light valve need not be adjusted once a level has been ascertained, only for such increase or decrease of volume as required during screening of film.

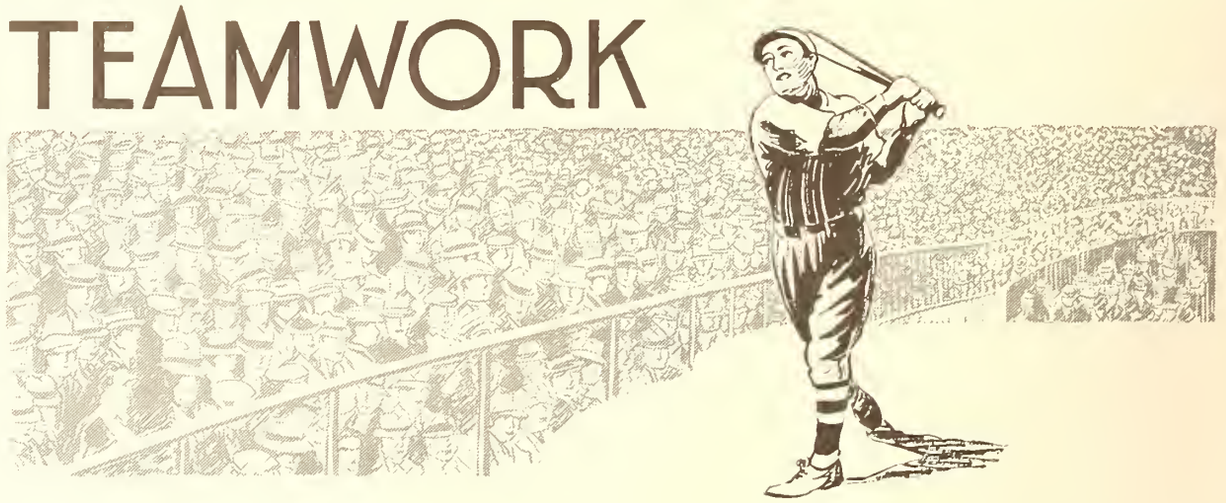
WHY PAY FOR STEEL GIRDERS



when tin would be cheaper

If you were building a new theatre you wouldn't let anyone sell you tin girders. They might be cheaper but they couldn't do the work of steel. . . . To buy equipment for that same theatre solely on a price basis would be just as shortsighted and just as sure to bring trouble. Theatre equipment is designed to meet specific requirements and to perform definite functions. Its price is not set by a salesman; it is fixed by the quality of materials and workmanship that go into its making. National Theatre Supply Company equipment is rarely higher in first cost; and it is always more economical in the long run. It pays to avoid substitution. TEAMWORK

INSURES CROWDS

Side Lights on the Transverter

A "14 collar" around a "16 neckband" means grief.

Many theatres today are adding to their "neckbands" with additional equipment, yet endeavoring to wear the old size collar.

From the smallest to the largest known requirement, there is a especially designed to meet that need.

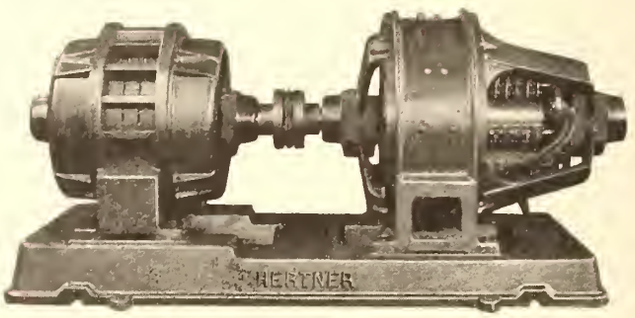
Our Engineers will gladly prescribe the right Transverter to exactly serve your requirements.



To insure crowds at your Theatre, there must be "team work" in your Projection Room.

That's why the Transverter is so popular with those who know projection needs.

It always backs up the performance of its team mates . . . gives them uniform, constant voltage with which to work. . . . The Transverter produces steady, direct current through accurate voltage automatically maintained!

That means smooth projection performance on the screen . . . which the public demands.

Why not insure better performance in your Projection Room, by investigating the merits of the Transverter, today.

EMERGENCY LIGHTING

● Roth Brothers and Company of Chicago, manufacturers of special electrical appliances, gives us this information concerning its recent installation of an emergency lighting system in the new Nortown theatre in Chicago:

"The theatre is equipped to protect its patrons from the dangers caused by failure of the lighting service, by the latest model 7385-GTS Roth emergency and exit electric light plant. The emergency and exit lighting circuits are normally supplied from the AC lighting service. In the event of power failure, the automatic transfer switch operates by gravity action and transfers the load to the storage batteries so rapidly that there is only a very slight flicker.

"The load is also automatically transferred back to the AC supply upon resumption of the normal power service. The batteries are kept fully charged, ready for emergency use by means of electric clock control, so that they are always in condition to supply the load during emergencies."

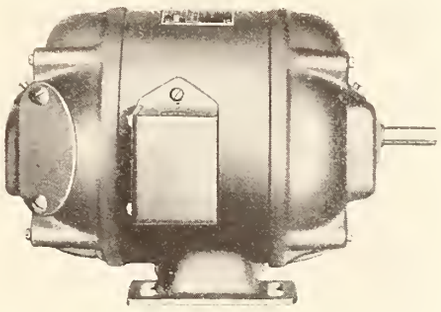
J. E. O. Pridmore of Chicago, architect of the Nortown, specified the system, which was installed by the Dearborn Electrical Construction Company of Chicago. The plant has sufficient capacity to supply all exit lights for a period of three hours.

"PRE-CRATERED" CARBONS

● National Carbon Company, Inc., has introduced "pre-catering" of 9 mm. by 20-inch high intensity projector carbons. Pre-cratering consists in forming a crater at the burning tip of the carbon during the process of manufacture. In addition, the holder end of each carbon is beveled to permit easy insertion in the holder jaws. All carbons of this size now made by National are subjected to this treatment.

Pre-cratering is meant to give better initial performance in two respects. First, clean burning when the arc is struck on a new carbon, and second, reduction of the time required for the arc to burn in.

rings out a wall control, stopping the fan uietly and starting it again in the opposite irection. Upward and downward air distribution is provided through the use of the eversible fan.



Century has developed a split-phase notor in various types to drive domestic and ndustrial apparatus that does not require static or initial starting torque appreiably in excess of the full-load torque, and nulti-speed motors of this type are available or directly connected fans.

LAMP FOR FOUR BASES

• Walter G. Preddy of San Francisco, manufacturer of theatre supplies, has brought out lamps for Powers, Simplex, RCA Photophone and Western Electric base. The carbons are fed automatically by means of a small motor. The mirror used in the lamp is 8½ inches in diameter.

NEW SAFETY DEVICE

• The Film Fire Prevention Company of Philadelphia, has placed on the market a safety control device known as the Ideal Safety Control, which is sold outright, and which may be installed on any make of projector. An extension stand model is for use in the wings off-stage to follow featured action during a stage performance. The frame is finished in several color tones of baked-on enamel and takes any concentrated filament lamp with standard socket up to 500 watts. This item shows an increase of $138,052 for February, with the two months' increase amounting to $225,844. Chile was the largest consumer of these products, shipments amounting to $235,788. Italy was next, with $49,314, and Canada third with $23,024. Most of the remainder of these shipments, according to the U. S. "NOISELESS RECORDING"

[The following paper was presented at a meeting of the Technicians' Branch, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, held at the Universal Studio. The paper was accompanied by the projection of special demonstration reels, including a scene from the Paramount Public production, "The Right to Love," recorded with the noise reduction device. Mr. J. T. Reed of the United Artists Studio, acted as chairman of the meeting, which preceded that reported in the March 14th issue of BETTER THEATRES, when the RCA Photophone System of Ground Noise Reduction was discussed. This paper, forming the Academy Report No. 25, is copyrighted by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.]

By H. C. SILENT
Development Engineer
Electrical Research Products, Inc.

IT IS common knowledge that, when a sound print of the variable density type is played in a reproducing machine, the volume of the reproduction is low if the print is dark and if a compensating adjustment is not made by turning up the fader. In addition, the ground noise of the film is also low. It has been a problem to take advantage of this latter fact with the former methods of recording because the mere act of printing the sound track dark, while it reduced the ground noise, also reduced the volume of sound from the film. This, of course, was undesirable. In the method of recording which is now being employed, these undesirable effects are overcome by regulating the density of the sound track at the recorder automatically.

It is well-known that there is a particular value of density or transmission of the photographic emulsion which permits of the loudest volume from the film without exceeding the photographic limits of good quality. Deviation from this point is possible without distortion if the volume or percentage modulation applied to the film is reduced. This can be taken advantage of by causing the film to be dark on low volume modulation, and as modulation becomes higher we lighten the film to the point where it has the greatest possible carrying capacity. If this can be done without distorting the volume of sound reproduced by the film, then we shall have a condition where the ground noise from the film is low during periods of low sound. Thus quiet intervals in the sound will be

That Preserves Films and Prevents Damage 100%

Every film (sound or silent) should be sprayed on both sides with Yankee Lubric before it leaves the exchange and at regular intervals while in use at the theatre.

Yankee Lubric keeps the film moist and flexible; prevents buckling and breaking; protects the emulsion; eases the strain on sprocket holes; lessens projector head wear. It is not a grease and will not streak or spot.

Place a trial order today. What you save on one film damage, will pay for a year's supply of Yankee Lubric.

It's a proved product used extensively by famous film exchanges and many theatres for the past five years. Try it yourself and be convinced that it is a superior film lubricant.

quiet and the ground noise, even though it rises with the sound, will always be more or less drowned out by the increased sound so that there is an effect of considerably reduced ground noise. In other words there is produced a constant signal to noise ratio in which the signal is always very predominant over the noise, and since noise is most noticeable in the quiet intervals there is a very real reduction in the amount of the ground noise.

There are a number of methods by means of which this variation in the transmission of the film can be effected. If we examine for a moment the light-valve employed in the Western Electric System of Recording, we shall see how one of these methods can be applied. In the past, this system has employed a light-valve in which two ribbons were normally spaced .001" apart. These ribbons were vibrated by the sound currents, moving but a slight distance on weak currents and a considerable distance on loud currents. The strongest currents would just bring the ribbons into contact as they vibrated. The space between them was therefore greater than necessary to permit the free vibration of the ribbons on weak currents. A sound track recorded under this method had a constant density corresponding to the one mil spacing between the ribbons and this density was caused to vary with the voice currents but maintained always its constant average.

Under the new system of recording an auxiliary electrical circuit is associated with the light-valve, so that when the sound currents are small and the ribbons need vibrate over but a very small amplitude, they are brought close together and this small vibration almost entirely fills the space between them. Then, as the sound increases in loudness, so that the ribbons are required to vibrate with a greater amplitude, the spacing is automatically increased by the electrical circuit, so that it is always just a little more than sufficient to permit this vibration of the ribbons. This is equivalent to altering the average spacing of the ribbons, so that it is at all times proportional to the envelope of the sound currents. Now, if we regard the amount of light which passes through the average spacing of the ribbons to the film, we find that this light is considerably reduced during the moments of silence or of low sounds, which results in a dark sound print. As the ribbons open up for increased sound currents, the amount of light correspondingly increases and a lighter sound print results. Since the actual vibration of the ribbons under the action of the sound currents has been undisturbed in this process, the amount of change of light which reaches the film and in turn the reproducing photoelectric cell has been unaltered even though the total amount of light has been decreased. Since the amount of change of light is unaffected, there is no volume distortion on reproduced sound as a result of this method of recording.

The extent to which the light-valve ribbons may be closed during quiet intervals is necessarily limited. They must not be completely closed, because it is not possible to construct a device which can instantaneously sample the amplitude of the

We have tried to show you that your theatre project, whether an entirely new undertaking or a remodeling job, can best be handled under Fulton's One Contract Plan, for many reasons.

Not the least of the advantages to you under this plan is the fact that the entire project is thus centralized and responsibility definitely fixed in one concern rather than divided among several.

You will not be annoyed and inconvenienced by alibis which are sure to arise and hinder progress when the job is divided among various contractors and outfitters.

The Fulton Company is organized to properly execute every part and parcel of any theatre creation from start to finish and to assume entire supervision of furnishings, decoration and equipment.

Thus organized, the job will proceed in orderly, harmonious fashion, with no occasion or reason for alibis regarding failure or delay in carrying out some part of the work.

So the inside of your theatre will bring patrons from without!

NOW the spotlight is turned from the outside of the theatre to the inside. From the exterior that first attracts patrons to the interior that actually sells and keeps patrons sold. Owners and managers now focus attention on the seated audience . . . make the interior of their theatre so inviting that it brings patrons from without!

In the competition for patron favor, seating . . . the chairs your audience sit in from 2½ to 3 hours, can be made to contribute definitely to bigger volume. For comfortable chairs . . . seating that permits of healthful relaxation is always appreciated by the theatre goer. Showmen find that extra comfort brings extra profits.

So, American Seating Company undertook research. Posture specialists worked with engineers. Chairs were built to conform with proved posture principles. From a maze of research findings, came comfort features that were quickly recognized by the motion picture industry. Roomy, luxurious chairs . . . seating built to fit the body—to correctly support the spine . . . to give the utmost in easy, natural comfort without slumping.

Illustrating Theatre Chair No. 8136 with 843 Standard
A comfortable chair of unusually attractive design that is meeting with the enthusiastic reception of theater owners and managers. Specially built for maximum sound absorption. Only one of the many American Seating Company types and styles of theatre seating.

Then followed acoustical research. It was found that seating had a direct bearing on the acoustics of the theatre . . . that properly built seating had a sound absorption value that assisted in producing more perfect sound effects. Chairs were built that stopped excessive reverberation, echo and hollow sounds—that helped sound reproduction and eliminated rasping noises, jumbling of words.

CHICAGO ILLINOIS

The foyer is simply appoined, the required atmosphere of warmth being achieved mainly through a deep-pile carpet that completely covers the floor. A drinking fountain is also located here, while several full-length mirrors add both size and embellishment to the room. A wrought-iron stairway leads from the foyer to the balcony.

The auditorium treatment largely consists in a series of identical panels along the walls, cove lighting drapes and a simple decorative outline of the proscenium arch. The cove lighting extends the full length of the ceiling and also above the proscenium, while further illumination is provided by luminaires in the upper section of each panel. Both ceiling and walls have been treated with acoustic tile, their surfaces left in their natural condition. The larger portions of the panels are lined with sisalkraft paper and draped in blue and silver Macaba cloth surmounted by a red velour valance, which is edged with a silver galoon. This color scheme is applied through the building. The drapes are by U. S. Scenic Studios.

The stage has three dressing rooms and toilet facilities, a completely equipped grid and the usual stage accessories. The projection room is roomy and of good height. At the ceiling is an exhaust fan connected to the fire fuses. Equipment includes two projectors with sound-on-film, one spot, one stereopticon and an automatic rewinder. Motor generators are used, located in the basement.

Heating is by hot air circulated through a fan system, while cooling is provided by introduction of air above the roof line.

contract is void and unenforceable where it is shown that one of the contracting parties is a public official and financially interested in the agreement. The latest case involving this important point of the law is Tuscan vs. Smith (153 Atl. 289). In this case it was shown that a state law provides:

"Town officers not to act when pecuniarily interested. No member of a city government or selectmen of a town, shall in either board of such government, or in any board of selectmen, vote on any question in which he is pecuniarily interested directly or indirectly, and in which his vote may be decisive; and no action of such government or board taken by means of such vote, is legal. . . . No member of a city government shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract entered into by such government while he is a member thereof; and contracts made in violation hereof are void."

Prior to March, 1929, Myron E. Smith and another were the tenants or lessees of a portion of the municipal building of the town of Skowhegan, Maine. In the leased premises they operated a moving picture business. This lease expired February 20, 1930. At the annual meeting in March, 1929, the town ordered its councilmen to award the lease to local parties if they would meet the terms of outsiders. On June 8th, a draft of a lease was submitted to the town voters and approved. It provided for the letting of that part of the municipal building used as a moving picture theatre, for a term of ten years at a rental of $12 a year. The lessee was, however, to heat and light the whole building and to furnish janitor service for it and for the surrounding grounds. In addition, the standard and quality of the pictures to be shown were subject to the approval of a board of five censors to be chosen by the councilmen.

Proposals for bids were duly published but only one bid was received which was a joint bid from Myron E. Smith and a partner. Soon afterwards Myron E. Smith purchased his partner's interest in the lease.

Negotiations were finally closed with Priscilla Theatres, Inc., by which the latter received from Myron E. Smith an assignment of the lease which was approved by Clyde Smith and Joseph Butler, two of three municipal councilmen. It is important to know that Clyde Smith is Myron E. Smith's brother. The testimony showed that Myron E. Smith received $10,000 for assigning the lease contract to Priscilla Theatres, Inc., $2,000 being paid in cash and the balance $8,000 being paid by notes bearing interest at 5 per cent.

The evidence did not show that Clyde Smith was an owner in the business, but at the time of this sale, and for a long period of time prior thereto, Myron Smith had been indebted to his brother in the sum of $4,000, and shortly after the sale his indebtedness was discharged by Myron turning over to Clyde notes of the Priscilla Theatres, Inc., to the amount of $3,000.

Suit was instituted by certain citizens to invalidate the lease on the grounds that the contract was made through activities on the part of Clyde Smith. After considerable controversy the higher court held the lease void and rendered an opinion requiring the Priscilla Theatres, Inc., to surrender its lease and ordered Myron E. Smith to return to the Priscilla Theatres, Inc., the amount of money paid for the lease. This court explained important law, as follows:

"It is important to bear in mind that Clyde Smith took an important part in the negotiations between his brother and the purchaser. . . . It was Clyde Smith who apparently prevented the deal between Myron and the Priscilla Theatres from falling through, and he assumed an active role in the negotiations. . . . In determining whether or not a contract such as this is against public policy and illegal, the court is not concerned with the technical relationships of the parties, but will look behind the veil which enshrouds the matter to discern the vital facts. . . . It is unnecessary to discourse on the duties of public officials. Their obligations as trustees for the public are established as a part of the common law, fixed by the habits and customs of the people. Contracts made in violation of those duties are against public policy, are unenforceable, and will be cancelled by a court of equity. No definite rule can be giving indicating the line of demarcation between that which is proper and that which is unlawful. . . . Gauged by the common and accepted standards defining the obligations of public officials, the lease given by the town of Skowhegan to the defendant Myron E. Smith was unconscionable and unlawful. To hold otherwise would be to repudiate the doctrine that he who holds public office is in a position of public trust."

Making of Repairs

IN ALL litigations involving lease contracts the law of the state in which the building is located controls the status and rights of the contracting parties. Moreover, a theatre operator is expected by law to make minor repairs so that a theatre building may conform with state laws, although the lease is silent regarding such necessary repairs.

For example, in Plaza Amusement Company vs. Rothenberg (131 So. 350), a theatre operator entered into a contract leasing certain property in the city of Meridian, Mississippi, known as the Grand Opera House and the Star Theatre for a term of twenty-five years, giving notes therefor payable for $1,000 each. The notes were dated and payable in New Orleans.

Under the law of Louisiana, property

BETTER PROJECTION

A Department Conducted for the Projectionist and the Exhibitor

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Building a Modern Projection Department

About July, 1926, Lester B. Isaac, then supervisor of projection for Loew's Washington theatre in Washington, D. C., was appointed general supervisor of projection for the entire Loew circuit of theatres. He has since been made director of sound and visual projection, which is a better title. In the five years that have elapsed he has organized one of the most efficient projection departments in the United States, which of course means in the world. This has been made possible through the "hands off" policy pursued by President Schenck, who ordered all matters pertaining to projection affairs turned over to the projection department, with the order, "proceed now and produce the goods."

Isaacs took as his first important duty, the task of obtaining an able assistant. He chose as his right-hand man, M. D. O'Brien, and I think it was a good choice.

Isaac then made a thorough investigation of existing conditions and got busily busy on an efficient method of handling projection matters in a large group of theatres, which, gentlemen, is no small job. In the process of reorganization he tells me, his greatest task was the standardization of equipment, as hardly any two theatres had the same type. Things were pretty badly mixed up, and to get them straightened out without excessive expense was a big problem.

The next consideration was given to the building up of the internal organization of the projection department, as the Loew circuit was in the throes of an enormous building program. This necessitated much extra engineering work in connection with the designing of new projection rooms and it became necessary to establish an office force to take care of this work. This new force was under the immediate control of the projection department, and its work was to make original projection room plans, after a survey of conditions in the theatre had been made. Wiring diagrams, conduit layouts and similar details were incorporated in the plans for projection rooms, and a particular effort was made to standardize whenever possible. In this way, projection rooms were planned for all requirements—that is, of course, for straight motion pictures and sound, or vaudeville and pictures.

Efforts were also made to simplify the routine of equipping the projection room. Typewritten or printed forms were prepared so that new equipment or replacements could be ordered with a minimum of effort. A printed questionnaire was sent out—containing blank spaces to be filled out by the staff of each Loew theatre, and this form properly filled out, returned and filed, gave immediate knowledge of every item of projection room apparattus contained in the Loew theatres. For instance, if it became necessary to know just what projectors were used in any Loew theatre and their exact age and condition, a reference to the questionnaire sheet covering that theatre gave—the required information. These sheets are now sent to each theatre—once a month. Upon their return the old sheet is destroyed, after checking with the new to see that no errors or omissions have been made.

Sound came upon the industry almost without warning, and just about the time that Isaac and O'Brien were expecting a little breathing spell, they were given orders to equip every Loew theatre with sound as quickly as possible. In spite of many obstacles and many new problems to be solved, every Loew's sound installation was made on time. The installation of sound frequently necessitated elaborate projection room alterations, and of course all this came under the direct supervision of Loew's projection department.

With sound, it became necessary to reorganize the projection department and greatly increase its personnel. Later Isaac proceeded to build up the department, so that today in addition to himself, he has M. D. O'Brien, assistant director of projection; one consulting acoustic engineer, one technical supervisor of sound, two district supervisors, eight sound engineers and a battery engineer (not forgetting to mention three very efficient secretaries).

It also became necessary to formulate plans for the maintaining and servicing of sound equipment in Loew's theatres. For the metropolitan district, in which are located 72 Loew theatres, the plan has been adopted of dividing this territory into eight districts of nine theatres each, with one engineer for each district.

These eight districts are grouped into two zones and a supervisor is in charge of each zone. Each engineer is required to make a periodic visit to each theatre in his district. While there, he makes any minor adjustments which may be necessatry for the improvement of sound projection. He reports to his immediate superior, who in turn is accountable to Isaac. In this way Isaac is kept in touch with what is going on in all Loew theatres. If any major changes are necessary in the equipment of any theatre or any new installation is to be made (and this may occur at any time through wear or improvements being put out by the company manufacturing the sound equipment), the work is handled under the immediate supervision of the technical supervisor. The organization so functions that the theatres are serviced by half of the engineers during the day, and by the other half during evening hours until the theatres are all closed. An engineer is detailed for duty in the office from 5 p. m. until 2 a. m., and he is immediately available if for any reason a theatre finds itself unable to get in touch with its own service engineer. The method employed for keeping in touch with the sound engineers consists of a typewritten "log" in which the various movements of each one is constantly recorded through the hours of service. The reports are made to the office by telephone.

Batteries in Loew theatres are purchased by the projection department and in the metropolitan district they are serviced and maintained exclusively by its own battery engineer. Loew's projection department is thus able to attend to any situation which may arise from the time the tentative plans of a theatre are prepared, and it continues constantly to guard against the thousand and one defects which may affect the delivery of good sound and visual projection to the public. I requested Lester Isaac to supply me with some particulars, which I have used in the preparation of this article, in doing so he writes:

"I am merely supplying a skeleton diagram showing the methods used in organizing and maintaining Loew's projection department and roughly explain how it functions. Time does not permit setting forth all the details I would like to lay before your readers. I think, however, some idea has been given of the method of handling the enormous amount of detail which comes to this department and the constant effort made to give our public good projection. I think it is no more than fair to make very clear that such a department could not be organized or operated without the help of others. I therefore want to give all possible credit to my able assistant and to the confidence and patience shown by my immediate superior Mr. Charles C. Moskowitz. I am also indebted to various organizations seeking to develop higher projection standards and to all my associates in the motion picture industry."

LOEW'S TRIBORO PROJECTION FACILITIES

THERE DOES not seem to be an end to the motion picture palaces this industry is erecting through its various great theatre chain organizations. I was invited a few days ago by Lester Isaac, director of projection for Loew's circuit, to visit the new Triboro theatre in Astoria, Long Island, which is Loew's newest addition and one they can be proud of. This theatre is under the management of William Nitschke.

As we entered we noticed a very restful effect. It seemed unusually "soft" for a motion picture theatre. This effect is obtained by an entire lack of marble in the lobby. It is very pleasingly finished in what at least looks to be Circasian walnut.

An elevator brought us to the door of the projection room—if that is what it can be called. The main room is at least 50 or 60 feet long, with a ten foot ceiling and a depth of something like 12 feet. At the end of this great space is a rewind room about 8 x 12 feet in size. Beyond this is a short hall from which opens a good-sized battery room and a toilet room. The storage room containing a substantial metal-covered work table is probably two feet deep by at least 18 feet long, extending along one side and one end of the room. This room is at least eight feet wide by very close to fifteen deep. It contains steel-enclosed lockers, a 12-drawer steel locker for gelatin, a good stock of carbons and other extra parts. The battery room, aside from the batteries, contains a motor generator set used for charging batteries.

The rewind room has a very excellent 15-compartment reel storage cabinet of pressed steel. Each compartment of this cabinet connects to a large pressed steel vent pipe leading to the open air, so that in case of fire not only is the fire confined to the single compartment in which it started, but also all the gas and smoke pass away to the open air.

In the rack under the steel hand rewinder table I made note of 24 projector reels, all brand new and in first class condition. On the hand rewind table was a film footage counter. The hand rewinder also has a plate which may be instantly attached to the rewinder so that film may be wound into a roll.

There is another 10-compartment film storage container, a Griswold film splicer and two Neumade leader boxes, one containing white and the other undeveloped leader film. There is an iron container under the table with a foot lever, in which to deposit waste. On the wall is a steel cabinet with six round bottom shelves. This is for the purpose of storing smaller reels of leader, etc. Film cement is contained in a Neumade metal-glass container, which, instead of a brush, has a perforated flat metal filament by means of which cement is distributed on the splice. This is excellent, except for the fact that they are not air tight, and cement deteriorates very rapidly when exposed to air, particularly if the air should happen to be the least bit damp.

The floors are of cement, either stained or painted. Decoration is dark green to the height of seven feet.

At the left end in the main projection room is space for two effect projectors, one of which, a Brenkert Master Brenograph, Model 57, has already been installed. Over this projector and the one that is still to be installed is a great canopy connected at either end to the vent pipe. There are three motion picture projectors installed, equipped with Hall & Connolly high intensity lamps. There is space and connection for the fourth projector.

Back of the motion picture projectors is a small steel cabinet in which fuses, etc., are stored. Also, about four feet from the floor are two steel cabinets for carbons. The sound equipment is Western Electric of the last model.

Under each observation is a Weston speed meter. Also at each projector there is a pair of head phones, to be used by the projectionist in listening to the sound. At the right hand end of the room are two Hall & Connolly spotlights equipped with colors. The projectionists have telephone connection with all parts of the theatre.

Beyond the right end of the main room is a large motor generator room, in which are housed two type C. P. 30 KW. Hertner Transverters. There is also a rheostat room in which is contained 10 rheostats, averaging probably 150 amperes each. These rheostats act as ballast for the motor generators.

The projectionists on duty when we arrived were S. Goldfarb and J. J. Cronin. Off duty projectionists were R. Russo, G. Langer and S. Friedman.

WARPED FILM

IT IS A BIT surprising the number of inquiries that are received from both projectionists and theatre managers concerning warped film. They will average, I think, at least a dozen a week, to which I have been replying by mail, for the reason that this particular thing has been so often dealt with in the past in this department. However, here is a typical question of the sort. It comes from a small city in Minnesota. It is propounded by a member of Local 219, Minneapolis, who, however, is now working elsewhere. It reads:

"I take the liberty of asking a small bit of information. Was present when you addressed Local 219, of which I am a member, last summer at the Minneapolis Orpheum theatre. Am having a little trouble which thus far I have been unable to remedy. The film vibrates over the aperture of our projectors. That is to say, it moves back and forth toward and away from the projection lens, thus throwing the screen out of focus.

"Have installed new aperture plates, tension shoes and springs without effect. It still does the same, except on good film. Is this due entirely to warped prints, or is it the fault of the projector mechanism, which latter is in good condition?"

I rather suspect this good friend has had argument with his friend, the boss, who possibly insists the fault is at least partly due to the projector. If that is true it would seem the manager is in error. If the aperture plates, the tension shoes and their springs are in perfect condition, then certainly the fault cannot possibly lie in the mechanism. It must perforce be in the film itself. Also, I note he says the fault is there "except on good film," and that itself comes pretty near to being the answer, does it not?

The film is evidently buckled, or at least under heavy buckling strain. I have no doubt but that in most such cases, if the film be stretched out gently and evenly, it will be found that it will not be perfectly flat. It will be found to be visibly buckled. No need to go into the whys and wherefores of the fault. Suffice it to say the fault is there, possibly because the film has been subjected to excessive heat, and possibly because of faults in the development process.

However, I have had film samples sent me which set up this in-and-out-of-focus trouble, which so far as the eye could determine, was perfectly flat. Careful tests, however, showed that while this was true, nevertheless the film was under an internal strain which caused it to buckle slightly when put under strain and heat. I doubt if this condition is often present, but just the same it occasionally is.

To projectionists I would say, if your aperture plates are in good condition and both their tracks and the tension shoes are perfectly flat and true, and if the tension springs are as they should be, then such trouble cannot possibly be anywhere else than in the film itself. It is warped.

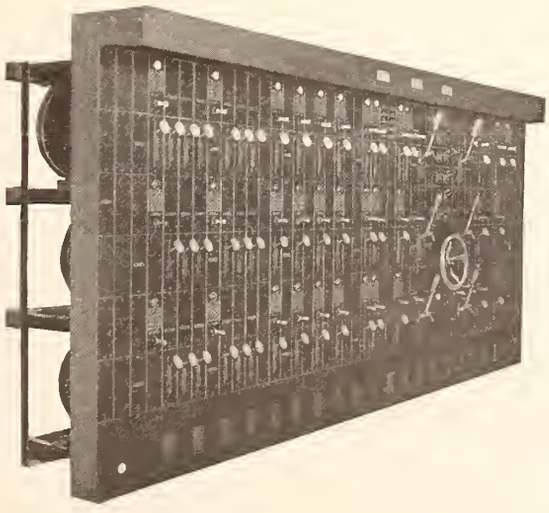
Bring Box Office Profits

Light when properly controlled is a box office attraction. The showmen who have learned this have built their businesses to great chains. You can in your own theatre put on unusual lighting effects that will help draw and hold your audiences.



The control of every light in Auditorium or on Stage within a few inches of the electrician's hand—this is the achieved result originated in The (FA) Major System.

Modern lighting is elaborate, but its control can be both flexible and simple as you will find in the All-Master (FA) Major System.

Oily and Gritty Prints

Will Ruin the Patronage of any Theatre

Dirty and spotty projection, with thunder-crashing sound reproduction, is caused by oily and gritty prints. The projectionist's skill in the operating booth is jeopardized and critical patronage is driven to theatres where clearer pictures and sound are produced.

Film Exchanges which absorb the oil and sweat accumulation from their prints with absorbing paper, furnished with all Waxolene Film Processing Machines, always furnish films free from oil and grit. This enables the projectionist to produce Clean—Clear projection and sound.

Waxolene Processed Prints are near fool-proof, with assurance of longer life and greater ease to eyes and ears of theatre-goers.

Theatres and projectionists will benefit greatly by insisting on Waxolene Processed Prints from their Film Exchange.

WORLD'S RECORD

A LETTER (presumably from Earle Holden, Fairfax theatre, Miami, Fla.), reads in part as follows:

"The piece of film attached to this letter holds, I believe, a rather unique worlds record. It has been projected 1,440 times. The question has often arisen as to the life of a film, especially as regards sound prints. We started using this trailer January 1, 1930. It was attached to the end of the newsreel. Its use was discontinued October 21. Between these two dates, it was used at five performances each day, making a total of 1,440 projections.

"Because of the waste each week in making attachment to the newsreels, the trailer was, of course, gradually shortened. For this reason only, we finally took it off. The sound on the last day was just as good as on the first day it was used.

"I send you this in the belief that it would be of interest to your readers. The fact that it is in such perfect condition after such an amount of use, reflects favorably upon the reliability of my projection staff. They keep their equipment clean and know how to handle sound prints. My projection staff includes E. Prince, R. Perry, J. C. Sauls and C. M. Boyd. If any mention is made of this film, please give the men a break."

The condition of this piece of film, which carries the legend, "The End," with the word "Publix" between, is proof-positive that what this department has been telling you for years is true; namely, that it is entirely possible to project films hundreds of times without any appreciable damage to the film. However, in order to do this there must be something more than "machine operators" in the projection room. There must be men who not only understand their equipment, but men who take pride in their work and have energy which stirs them on to keep their equipment in perfect condition. It also is necessary that there be a theatre management that will supply what is necessary to keep the equipment in perfect condition.

Examining this bit of film, one notes first of all it apparently has not been smeared with oil, which proves that Messrs. Prince, Sauls, Perry and Boyd are not of the sort who are too inefficient, or perhaps I might better say, too lazy to prevent any oil seepage from reaching the film. Secondly, the sprocket holes of this film are in a condition which proves the aperture tension of the projectors to be properly and intelligently adjusted. Thirdly, considering the fact that this film has been rewound almost 1,500 times, its condition shows that rewinding has been properly and efficiently done.

My compliments to these projectionists, and to the theatre manager who wrote this letter. As I said in the first part, his name is presumably Earle Holden, though the letter is signed merely "Earle." Evidently he appreciates good work in the projection room and is not unwilling to give credit and show appreciation for it. Possibly that is one reason why his men do such high grade work.

SPEED OF LENSES

I HAVE a letter from T. L. Donovan, projectionist of Salisbury, Mo., who asks me to explain just what is meant by 'speed of a lens.' He says he has seen the term used in print many times, but has never either heard or read an intelligible explanation of its meaning.

The thing is very simple, Friend Donovan. The "speed" of a lens really means the speed in which it will make what may be called a photographic impression of acceptable density upon a photographic plate or film carrying a certain emulsion. Applied to projection, it means the power of a lens to illuminate a screen of given area and type with a light source of given power.

In other words, Donovan, it means the amount of light a lens will admit and transmit. It's possible you know, for a photograph to be made by using a pin hole, but since it would transmit but little light, naturally it would require a lot of time for "exposure." Similarly you might, theoretically at least, illuminate a theatre screen by means of a pin hole, but the illumination would be totally invisible, since only an infinitesimal amount of light would pass through the tiny opening.

For the minute pinhole we therefore substitute a lens, each point upon the surface of which is, in effect, a pin hole, since each point will do what a pin hole will do; namely, admit, transmit and focus light rays. We thus may pass light up to a certain limit in proportion to tahe lens diameter. It will therefore have a "speed" in illumination proportional to its diameter.

While there are some other things mixed in with it, broadly the speed of a lens, in projection at least, means its free diameter. In photography the focal length of the lens has a lot to do with it, but that does not, I think, apply so directly in projection.

PUZZLING CASE

H. W. MCFARLIN, projectionist of the Capitol theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., comes across with a very well put case which seems to be not altogether uncommon. He says, "Dear Friend Richardson: For a long time, with the help of your articles in the Better Projection Department and, of course, the Bluebook, I have been able to correct or understand all of my problems. I have one now though, that I can find no explanation for, either in the Bluebook or from my co-workers.

"An exchange has been supplying the Capitol with prints which are buckled. This much we all agree on. These prints when projected on our own equipment give us a very pronounced in-and-out of focus effect—so bad that some of our patrons walk out on us. Thin film stock, along with the processing liquid used, is my guess for the reason the prints were buckled.

"The exchange refuses to admit that its prints are buckled, and because of my argument with it, I decided to screen one of the prints at the Florida theatre, expecting of course the same results on their equipment as on mine, thus proving to the exchange that there was nothing wrong with our equipment. To my surprise there was absolutely no in-and-out of focus effect at the Florida.

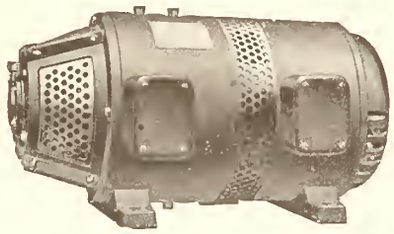
"The Florida is equipped with Simplex projectors and Hall & Connolly high intensity lamps. Not satisfied with the experiment, I took the same print to another house, using the same equipment as at the Capitol. At this house I got the same results as at the Capitol, a very pronounced in-and-out effect. Can you explain to me why the same print will project O.K. on the Florida equipment and give a very pronounced in-and-out effect on the other two equipments? I have checked our equipment and find the gate tension, aperture plate tracks, sprockets all O.K. In fact, I don't see any difference between the condition of the Florida's equipment and my own, except the type of lamps used. I would appreciate your explanation of the problem."

I would like to receive comment on this from other projectionists, who may have encountered and discovered the cause for such a condition. First of all, I would suggest to Brother McFarlin that he secure a steel straight-edge and make sure that his aperture plate track surfaces are perfectly straight and level. It is not impossible that in putting on an aperture plate a bit of dirt may have got behind it and buckled these parts slightly, though it does not seem possible that that would be the case in all of the projectors used. It should nevertheless be checked up on. I am assuming, of course, that the projector aperture plate tracks and tension shoes are not worn, and that the tension springs apply the right amount of pressure. (See general instruction No. 9, Page 636, Volume 2, of the Bluebook.)

If all these things are found to be in good order, then the only thing I can think of which might set up such a condition would be that the spot at the aperture is very much hotter than the one at the Florida. This may be caused by the fact that he is using a front shutter, whereas the Florida equipment employs rear shutter.



If any of our readers can suggest any other reason for this, I will be glad to hear from them.

RIGHT AND WRONG

A FEW days ago I overheard an argument between a projectionist, and a theatre manager. The manager was the projectionist's boss. The argument was a hot one, and in my opinion the projectionist was right, as I later told the manager. However, the manager had discharged the projectionist and would not recede from his position. I was reminded of some lines in my scrapbook, which read as follows:

Here lies the body of old Sam Grey,
Who died disputing the right of way;
He was right, dead right as he sped along,
But he's just as dead as though he'd been wrong.

The argument arose because the manager had peremptorally ordered the projectionist to come early enough to look over and make all necessary repairs to films received from the exchange. The projectionist very naturally and very rightly refused to do this unless he received extra pay for it, advising the manager it was the duty of the exchange inspectors to inspect and repair film, sending them to the theatre in condition for immediate use.

It seems that film in very poor state of repair had been received from the exchange upon several occasions. The manager, instead of refusing to accept the films, or else withholding a portion of the rental price as pay for attending to what most emphatically was the exchange inspector's work, tried to force his projectionist to do it gratis. This the projectionist very rightly declined to do. He was right, but just the same he was without a job, and in this instance there was no union to protect him.

I have told managers before, and again tell them, that they pay for film in mechanical condition to project. That is to say, there should be no ripped sprocket holes, no loose splices or other fault which will operate to prevent the films being projected with safety without repairs. That is a condition the theatre pays for. It is, in the very nature of things, a part of the service presumed to be rendered by the exchange.

AN INTERSTING LETTER FROM ENGLAND

HERE IS a most interesting letter from George T. Miller, projectionist of the Picture House, Botchergale, Carlisle, England. Friend Miller says, "I have long intended to write you. There are scores of subjects I would like to write on, but am only going to raise one particular subject in this letter.

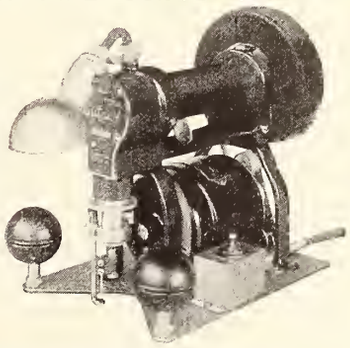
"In the first place, before I enter into my chief subject I will say that I am employed as chief projectionist at the above theatre, where I have been for five and one half years. It is only a small house, seating 1,000, but has a first class projection outfit, of which I am very proud. We have Simplex projectors, Peerless high intensity arcs and RCA, Model D, sound equipment. I can assure you, Mr. Richardson, it produces very clear sound. It is in every way reliable. In 15 months not a single moment has been lost because of any fault in the equipment, which is, I think you will agree, not at all a bad record. I would like to say, in passing, that I regard our reproduction as far ahead of that put out by any other theatre sound equipment I have yet heard.

"I was very much interested in your article in a current issue on RCA improvements. I have since spoken to the RCA District engineer and have shown him the article. He is going to try and get one of the latest type speakers for this hall, so that our reproduction will be still better than it is.

"And now I am going to ask a question which will possibly be quite unique to you. Some time ago I read your remarks, as well as those made by others on the subject of threading up 'talkies.' Much emphasis was laid on the fact that the film loops must be of such size that there would be exactly 14½ inches between the sound and picture start frames, this being necessary to insure perfect synchronism. Now most sound films received are printed with the sound start and picture start frames exactly twenty frames apart, hence, to be accurate one cannot be entirely guided by these. And now at last I come to the point.

"If every sound film was printed with the sound and the corresponding action exactly 14½ inches apart, and if every projectionist were to thread up with this precise theoretical distance between these two points, I maintain that they would all be wrong, since they would be, strictly speaking, threading to suit the front rows and the projection room monitor horn only, and would be very much out of sync for the back seats, which may be as far even as 150 feet from the horns behind the screen.

"Sound, you know travels 1,150 feet per second. It will therefore take approximately one-fifth of a second for it to reach the back of our hall. Threading up to suit the back of the hall would mean a shortening of the loops between the gate and sound apparatus by between two and one-half frames, but of course one has to suit the average distance from the screen, so we thread up from 13 to 13½ inches between."



There is considerable more to this, but the main idea is already rather fully set forth. Our English brother is in error. He is in error because, while the patrons seated nearer the screen can see the lip movement very clearly and instantly recognize any slip in exact synchronism, this is not true with those seated at a distance from the screen. Moreover we are accustomed to exactly this sort of thing every day in every day life. We see and hear a man 70 feet away talking. There is a certain discrepancy between the sound and the lip movement, but that discrepancy is perfectly natural and we therefore do not notice it. Moreover, we do not notice it because we do not see the lip action clearly at that distance. The same thing is true at a distance of 150 feet. The only difference is in closeups, and in my opinion, closeups in which there is talking should be avoided.

I might add that this particular thing has been considered by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and by others, including this department. However, it is to the credit of Friend Miller that the thought occurred to him. His idea seemed very plausible to many others, including myself, until it was discussed at length and all phases of the matter were carefully considered.

THE STANDARD RELEASE PRINT AGAIN

FROM L. A. Fox, projectionist at Publix Capitol theatre in Salisbury, N. C., comes an interesting suggestion with regard to change-over cues. I present it merely as an interesting item, with the remark that what Friend Fox says concerning the likelihood of the dots in the Standard Release Print being far more likely to be seen by those who are looking for screen faults than by the ordinary theatre patron, is in my opinion very true. He says:

"I have noted, with much intrest the various comments made through the department with regard to the Standard Release Print, and the various methods suggested for cueing changeovers. May I voice my own opinions with regard to this matter?

"Concerning the Standard Release Print, I like the standard footage idea at the beginning of reels. With it present, so long as no one cuts the leader when doubling up (an inexcusable crime), it is a very simple matter to make changeovers without rehearsal—that is, of course, provided the signal dots have not been destroyed in the doubleing up process. I am very much in favor of the standard leader.

"With regard to the dots themselves, I believe they are not so objectionable as some of the brothers seem to think. Naturally, a projectionist will notice the changeover cues of another projectionist, if they can be seen at all. Is it not true that a projectionist watching a show in another theatre than his own place of employment is, consciously or not, watching for defects in projection—screen image faults? He may even be doing this entirely subconsciously.

"Do you believe the average theatre patron is as sensitive to faults, such as the dots in question, as you or I would be? I believe he is not! I have asked at least 50 of our own patrons whether or not they have noticed the dots. Not one of them replied in the affirmative.

"The chief objection I am myself able to raise against the dots is the eye strain it sets up for the projectionist who has a long projection distance. That point should, in my opinion, receive a lot of consideration.

"But what about the prints which do not have the Standard Release Print? Many ask how they may cue the changeover with such films, so that they may put on a perfect show without rehearsal when the Release Print is absent. For their benefit I will set forth my own method.

"Presuming me to be cueing the end of reel No. 1, to change to reel No. 2.—first, I measure the exact distance between the starting mark and the first frame of the picture on reel No. 2, which we will assume to be exactly 15 feet. Next, I rewind reel No. 1, and exactly one foot from the last frame of pictures thereon I cement a piece of clear film on the frame line between two picture spaces. This piece is cut narrow enough to fit between two sprocket holes and short enough to reach only long enough to reach from one edge of the film to the sound track. It must not extend on the sound track else there will be a click produced in the horns. As I have said we assume that reel No. 2 has a 15-foot leader.

"In my case, I will measure 19½ feet from the strip cemented at the end of No. 1, and there will cement another just like it. By this I mean I will measure ahead on reel No. 1. This strip will be the signal to start the motor. It will be 19½ feet from or in advance of the other, and will be the signal to start the motor. The last one is the changeover signal.

"You will note that the distance between these two markers is 4½ feet greater than the footage between the starting mark and the picture on the incoming reel. In our case that is exactly right, but of course this additional footage between splices will vary with different types of equipment, because different motors will come up to full speed in different lengths of time. A little experimenting will determine exactly what footage will fit any individual case, and believe you me it is well worth the time and trouble involved.

"Hey, wait a minute! I almost forgot a very important point; namely, be sure you cement the motor starting cue on lightly, and that you pull it off when you ship the show out. The dowser or changeover cut can stay on because it is always the same. The starting cue does vary, however, for the reasons set forth. Hence, in order to avoid trouble for the other projectionist it should be removed.

"I really see no good reason why the system I have tried to describe might not be able to take the place of the dots in the Standard Release Print, the strips being put on exactly where the dots would be in the Print. Their advantage as against the dots are two; namely, they would be entirely invisible to the audience, and they would cause no eye strain to the projectionist, to which I might add that if they be put on as I have described there will cause absolutely no click in the horns, nor will they cause the picture to move or jump perceptibly. Outside the projection room no one knows they are there.

"This system is not original with me. As you know it was started something like two years ago by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but later discarded for the dot system. I have merely taken the old system and ironed out a few of its rough spots.

"And so, Mr. Richardson, if you think the system, as I have described it, has any value, just pass it along to the man who may not as yet have figured out a system which will always work and which is unobjectionable.

"As to the department, many thanks for it. It has served me for many years."

The system Fox describes is, as he says, by no means a new one. It has been tried and for several reasons rejected. It didn't work out well in practice. One of these reasons is that the signal is known by means of a click, and presumably from splices being made, or because other projectionists had put in their own click stop, and cases were known where as many as four or five stops were attached, so that it sounded like a telegraph when it went through. However it cannot be substituted for the dots in the Standard Release Print, for the simple reason that producers would not paste on a separate strip of film on each reel of film of their productions, and such a thing cannot be photographed into the film so that it would work. It is one of those things which might work out very well for the individual projectionist, but for various reasons I would recommend that both signals be pasted on the film and removed when the film is shipped.

SOUND OR NOT

MANY a projectionist has received a splendid, red hot bawling out because the stage horns took a vacation. They were as silent as a grave on a quiet night. So far as they were concerned, the audience could almost hear its collective teeth grow.

The manager rang-g-g-g-g the telephone bell with a hearty will. Came "Hello." And he responded, "What in [deleted] are you fellows doing up there? Why don't you attend to business? Don't you know there is no sound?"

"Why, Mr. Manager, this is a sound-proof room we are in. How would we know that?"

"Well of all the double-distilled dumb-bells. Haven't you got a monitor horn. Why haven't you got it working?"

"It is working but——"

"It is working? Then why don't we get sound down here?"

You see, friend manager was not aware that the fact that the monitor horn is functioning perfectly, is absolutely no proof that the screen horns are on the job. But that, nevertheless, is the fact. That is just one more thing the monitor horn doesn't do.

Monitor horns do just one thing, and one thing only—they advise the projectionist that there is sound on, or in, the system. That does not necessarily mean that the stage horns are functioning, however. Possibly the stage hands failed to plug them in!

DUPED PRINTS

OUR OLD friend, Kenneth R. Caldwell, projectionist at Shea's Bailey theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., is with us again with the following.

"I am writing to ask you to throw your influence against something I hold to be a gross violation against everything right and proper, and that is the present tendency of exchanges in supplying larger theatres with duped disc prints of pictures.

"As all the producers have now changed over to making only sound-on-film recording, they have been forced to dupe discs for the smaller houses which have nothing but disc equipment. This dupe recording is, as you know, none too good. The inferior quality of tone reproduction is especially apparent now we have noiseless recording.

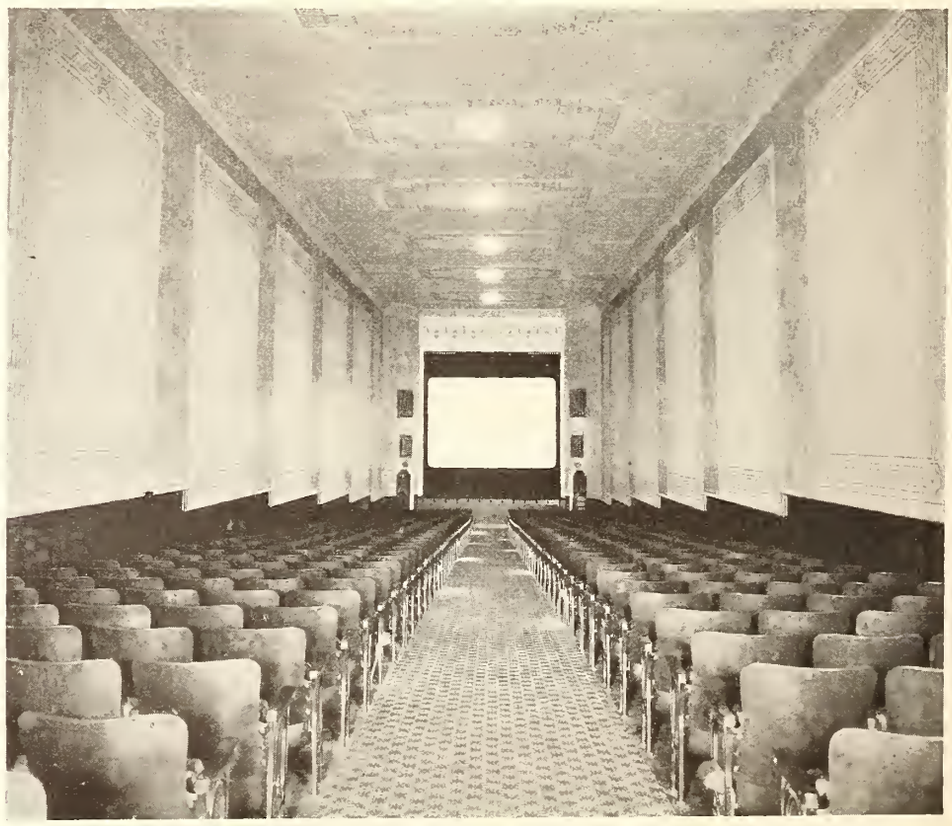
"Here is the trouble. The smaller theatres have and are gradually replacing poor equipment with better types, but are only installing sound-on-film, hence the discs that were originally intended for them are useless. Consequently, they are being sent to the larger houses which have both equipments. At the Bailey theatre we have, as you know, the larger type Western Electric equipment for both disc and sound-on-film. When a booking is made of a picture that is playing out of town, in, say, two country houses on the same date as the Bailey, the Bailey gets the disc print and the two houses who have only sound-on-film get the film prints."

Friend Caldwell goes considerably further, but this portion of his letter is, I think, sufficient. He is a little mixed in his data, I think. He is msitaken in assuming that producers have all stopped making disc prints. However, it is quite possible, nevertheless that what Brother Caldwell complains of is being done, and if it is being done it represents very poor practice.

It is a matter that is very hard to deal with, however, being one of those many things that crop up in an industry which is changing its methods and practices so rapidly. As the matter now stands the preponderance of productions are of course sound-on-film, but just the same there is still much very excellent stuff being put out on disc. It is to be sincerely hoped that the duped method of recording will soon be abandoned. While it is possible, as Warner Brothers contend, that a somewhat better recording can be made on disc, still it seems to me that the confusion set up by the two methods does far more damage than the small degree of added excellence (if that added excellence be granted) can possibly compensate for. I would be glad to hear from other projectionists and from theatre managers concerning the matter laid before us by Brother Caldwell.



SOUND SCREEN LIGHT LOSS

FROM AN exhibitor in Idaho comes this letter:

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 11th, replying to mine of the 4th. Please accept my thanks for the information contained in your letter. Note that you hesitate to give any direct advice in the way of recommending any specific make of equipment, which same I would not expect you to do.

"In my previous letter I left out one thing which it is now more than ever necessary to know. I have General Electric Mazda equipment, 900-watt lamps. Can I expect these lamps to be satisfactory when using a sound screen? For example, suppose that I installed a Transtone sound screen, would that mean that I must put in some kind of an arc light source in order to adequately illuminate the screen?

"My reason for asking is that the Mazda equipment has been so satisfactory, not only in the illumination of the picture but in very greatly reducing my current bills, that I would not care to discard it except it be absolutely necessary."

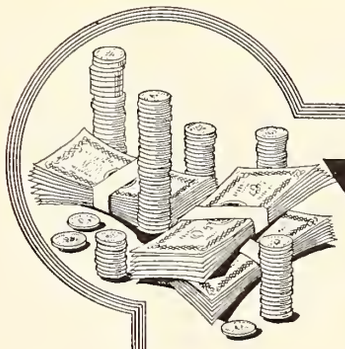
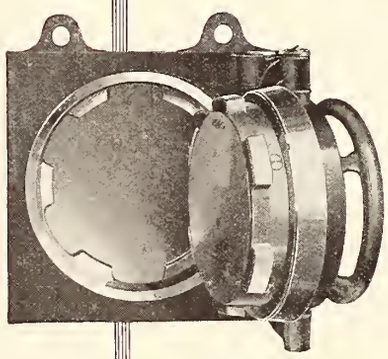
It may, I think, be generally accepted that, taking the perforated sound screen as our example, the reduction in illumination will be approximately 10% by reason of perforation. This is not, of course, an accurate estimate. Also, it would vary somewhat with different makes of screen. However, we may accept it as sufficiently near the fact to use in practice.



It must however be remembered that if this exhibitor has a silent screen say one year old, and he substitutes for it a new perforated screen surface of the same sort, it may reasonably be accepted as fact that instead of a decreased illumination he will really have an increase. In other words the reflection efficiency of the new surface would be so much greater than that of the year-old one that the 10% perforation loss should, and in all human probability would be very much more than counterbalanced. It would only be after a year of use that the 10% loss would come, though the deterioration in reflection efficiency would begin immediately upon installation of the screen and would continue to grow, day by day, week by week and month by month, so long as the screen be used without cleaning. That is an item which receives too little attention from exhibitors, theatre managers and projectionists.

I have many times advised, and do again advise exhibitors to insist upon the manufacturer who sells him a screen supplying a sample of the surface at least eighteen inches square. Compare the sample very carefully with the screen surface itself. Make sure they are identical, and that the sample is new. Then wrap the sample in black cloth and lay it away in a dark, dry place, where it will lie perfectly flat. Good plan to lay it on a closet shelf, under other papers or things.

With such a sample in hand the projectionist or manager may at any time make an understandable test of his screen surface reflection powers, or rather of how much those powers have fallen off, merely by suspending the sample against some portion of the screen surface, being certain that it lies perfectly flat against the screen. Turn the white light on the screen and if the sample and screen appear as of equal brightness, then all is well. If not, then you know that reflection power has decreased, and you may easily judge as to just about exactly how much, or if a light measuring device be available, you can determine the matter accurately.



DISCOVERED: 'PROJECTION'

RECENTLY I received a reprint of an article by Willard Howe, which presumably appeared in one of the trade papers. In this article Mr. Howe first rather apologizes for having followed the lead of this department and finally arrived at the conclusion that the man who projects motion pictures and sound really is something more than a machine operator. Mr. Howe then consumes considerable space advertising some school course, and explain-

IT'S YOUR MONEY KEEP IT SAFE!

HARD cash—the money you take in during each business day—presents a constant invitation to hold-up men and burglars. They make it their business to discover the places where cash is unguarded. You should make it your business to see that your money is beyond their reach.

and has a record for successful resistance to burglars that is unexcelled. When installed, it is anchored in a block of solid concrete which gives complete protection against fire and absolutely prevents removal from the building or attack at any point except the heavy thief-proof door.

The York Chest will pay for itself in a reasonable length of time by the saving in burglary insurance alone.

ing, in some detail, that the projectionist of today really must know quite a lot.

Mr. Howe says he does not know who is responsible for the campaign to abandon the term "operator" and substitute "projectionist," which would indicate that the gentleman is not at all well acquainted with projection matters of the past. Anyhow, he does me the honor to approve of the change. He says the "change has value because the job is no longer a mere mechanical job."

Might I ask by what process of reasoning Mr. Howe accumulates the idea that it ever was? Seems to me it became very largely optical and considerably electrical the very first day a motion picture was projected.

CRITICISM VERSUS BACK-PATTING

RECENTLY in an article by my good friend, P. A. McGuire, chief advertising man for the International Projector Corporation, he used up most of one full page talking for "Progress Through Understanding," which is all right and doubtless may help some. McGuire has for a long while been engaged in a laudible effort to tame me down. He does not belive in giving voice to merited criticism. His view is that we can more quickly obtain improvement and the remedying of abuses by using soft, kind, soothing words. Harsh criticism is to him taboo, no matter how grevious the fault may be.

If I go into a projection room and find the projectionist sitting comfortably, with his feet cocked up on a table or shelf, reading the evening paper, as I am sorry to say I still occasionally do, while a motor runs the show, with perhaps one or two cans on the floor under each projector to catch what flyng oil the films are unable to absorb (also a situation still occasionally found), I should not criticise the sinner! Instead I should talk to him kindly, directing his attention to the fact that perhaps he really should, occasionally (between paragraphs) glance at the screen, and that possibly a wee bit less oil might be made to suffice, though of course eventually all such abuses will be eliminated by Progress Through Understanding, as Brother McGuire would put it.

Brother McGuire and I are good friends. We have been for many years. I admire McGuire as a hard working, honest, most excellent advertising man, and one who has very often used his advertising space for the betterment of projection. I would land on any one who slandered him to me with both feet, believe you me! However, I most emphatically do not agree with him in any degree in the matter of substituting soft soap for well earned criticism.

Taking the article in question, for example. It is well written. It says a lot of nice things. It reads nicely. It pats every one on the back. It steps absolutely on not one of any one's pet corns. However, when the average man has finished with it he will smile a beautiful smile, indulge in a moment of satisfied self-contemplation, and then promptly forget the whole dad-blamed thing. That is not, in my 'umble opinion, the sort of thing that makes for improvement. I may not always write so pleasingly. When I enter a projection room and find things satisfactory I say so, and in no uncertain words. And because the projectionist very well knows that had that praise not been deserved it would not have been given, he is hugely pleased. He will read the article many times. He may even cut it out and read it to his friends. He will actually do better work because of it, for he knows it is honest and that he has earned it. That is why he places high value upon it.

On the other hand, when a bad condition is found I criticise it sharply. The one criticised may and probably will be as mad as a wet hen, but just the same he well knows the criticism was merited. He won't cut that article out and show it to his friends. However, he will remember it, and the reaction will, at least to some extent, make for improvement in his work. Moreover the reading of the criticism will, beyond any question of a doubt, work out beneficially to others.

Progress Through Understanding may be all right, so far as it goes, but it doesn't go very far. The most important item of understanding with relation to projection is to undertsand the fact that excellence is not allied with laziness or slipshod methods. It comes only through hard work and lots of it, plus close application to study.

McGuire evolved the slogan, "Better Projection Pays." That particular thing was very good indeed. It helped a lot. I'm for it and always have been. His later one, "Progress Through Understanding," I don't think such a lot of. It is too darned altruistic. We will get considerably further, I believe, by looking facts squarely in the face.

A KIND OF SIDE WHEEL STEAMER

A LETTER from Lester Borst of the Rivoli theatre, Two Rivers, Wis., says, "may I say that I am becoming a bit peeved at the way some producers are handling the Standard Release Print system. Last week I received a print of 'The Lottery Bride,' a so-called Standard Release Print production. It was really about as standard as a side wheel steamer would be to a screw propeller ship.

"Each reel had a 15-foot leader against the 12-foot standard. As for cues, why there were none—that is to say, no standard cues. However, each reel end for 20 feet back was messed up with punch marks, stickers and china pencil smears. Could name several other producers who are far from the standard they are presumed to carry. Thus far only Columbia product has been up to the standard in every way. Is this standard a joke? If not, then why in the name of holy things don't the producers get down to brass tacks."

Brother Borst has not described the departures from standard, except for the additional three feet of leader, well enough for me to tell just what, if anything, is wrong with the procedure of the producers. I have had other complaints, but to date no one has carefully set forth the exact nature of the faults.

Of course, the punch marks are no fault of the producer. Also, he probably put the cues there and some dumbbell alleged projectionist cut them off. Won't some of you who complain that producers are not playing the Standard Release Print game properly be good enough to advise, in minute detail, what way they default?

A COMPLAINT ABOUT SHORT REELS

IN A LETTER, Lester Borst, projectionist at the Rivoli theatre, Two Rivers, Wis., says:

"Dear Dad Richardson: Producers insist on releasing some of their productions in extremely short reels. Can you tell me why? From the viewpoint of the projectionist this practice is a very serious annoyance. It is, in fact, absolutely ridiculous! For example, last Sunday we ran M-G-M's 'Passion Flower.' The production is an excellent one, but it was mounted on short reels. The first three reels were all right, but, starting with reel No. 4, the length dropped off to an average of about 400 feet. I, for one, can see no justifiable reason for that sort of thing.

"I could name many other features we have had in which the same stunt was pulled. Why not bring this subject up at the next S. M. P. E. meeting? I am sure you would have plenty of support from all projectionists.

"By the way, why aren't Fox, Warner Brothers and First National using the new standard release print in their productions? If their studios think their cue sheet method is better, they should visit some theatre where a standard release is being used and compare it with their own."

THE USUAL METHOD

A GENTLEMAN from Searcy, Ark., writes, "I am a projectionist with two years experience, but I would like to study up on it so I can join a union in some big town or city. The town I worked in has about 4,000 population. I am out of a job at present and so am following other work until I can get into projection again. Where can I take a course in projection? Also I want to buy some good books on projection."

This is the usual line of procedure, or at least it is an all too common line of procedure. A man goes into projection and confines his efforts to learning only what can be learned through main strength and awkwardness, instead of getting books and studying while he is working, which is by long odds the very best time to study. He waits until he gets out of a job. Then he wakes up and does what he should have done in the first place!

I am not roasting the man from Searcy in particular, but through him am talking to thousands of others, particularly in the small towns. I repeat: The best time to study is while working on the job.

AN ENVIABLE RECORD

THIS DEPARTMENT has been advised that the Missouri theatre, St. Joseph, Missouri, opened with a Western Electric sound system on August 26, 1928. There is nothing very startling in that fact, but the remarkable thing is that it claims to have run since that time, not only without a shutdown, but without the necessity for putting in even so much as one emergency call for service engineer.

In this theatre, the projectionists are allotted two hours each week for a thorough cleaning and testing of all parts of the equipment. Presumably this time is allotted with pay, and in my judgment that is an extremely wise move on the part of the management. In addition, there is, of course, a daily routine check by the projectionist, and the usual inspection of the Erpi engineer.

FROM INDIA

AN INTERESTING letter has come from the Universal Picture House in Srinagar (Kashmir), India, asking advice concerning certain projector light source problems and sound equipment. The signature is undecipherable. Presumably it is from the manager. In part the letter says:

"I have been much impressed with this section [The letter is addressed to the Projection Department] and thank you for the valuable information I have received. I am situated in a remote corner of the earth, 200 miles from the nearest railway station. The country is small and with little possibilities. I shall be obliged for your advice in the following matters." (The correspondent then asks several questions, which have been answered by mail and he has been put in touch with a certain firm in Calcutta.)

"Noiseless Recording"

straight line part of the emulsion characteristic. Since this new method contemplates recording over the same part of the film characteristic, and within the limits of this characteristic previously utilized, there is no change in film technique. The processing which produced the best quality of reproduction with the former method gives the best quality of reproduction with this new method.

Referring to Fig. 1, which is an approximate characteristic of the ground noise obtained from film of various densities, the point A indicates the approximate density employed in normal recording. By shifting the ribbons to have something less than their normal spacing, we can increase the density during the quiet portions of the sound track to point B. This results, then, in a reduction of the noise in the quiet intervals. Then, as the sound currents are applied to the valve, its spacing automatically varies, so that it at all times has sufficient carrying capacity, as represented by the spacing between the ribbons, to carry the applied sound currents. A slight amount of margin is always established as a factor of safety, in order that a sound which builds up suddenly will not clash the ribbons. The manner in which the carrying capacity of the light-valve or, in other words, the spacing of the ribbons varies with the applied sound currents as illustrated in Fig. 2. It will be seen from this that for weak sound currents below a certain minimum amplitude the ribbon spacing is always the minimum, and the average spacing is unvarying. As the sound currents build up to near their maximum amplitude, it is seen that the average spacing of the ribbons (or their carrying capacity) is gradually increased up to a maximum which corresponds to that of the normal light valve. As the input is further increased, there is no further increase in the ribbon spacing, and clash occurs precisely as it does in the normal light-valve.

It is entirely possible to continue the carrying capacity of the ribbons upward by allowing their spacing to exceed the normal spacing. No useful purpose is served by this, however, since the carrying capacity of the photographic emulsion would be exceeded by so doing and an effect equivalent to clashing of the light-valve would be obtained. Therefore, the device has been purposely arranged so that photographic overload and light-valve overload occur simultaneously, if the recording lamp has been set previously for entirely normal recording.

COMBINING SOUND AND PROJECTION . . DEPARTMENTS

In the next, the June 6th issue of Better Theatres, the departments, Sound in the Theatre, and Better Projection, will be combined. This is to be done in the belief that separation of editorial treatment of the two subjects is no longer tenable. Projection now is Sound—and Sound is Projection. It is hoped that readers will find that the single, enlarged department will serve their interests more conveniently.

The general principles of noise reduction for sound records on film may be applied to other than the present form of light-valve recorders by making circuit changes as required by the particular type of equipments that may be involved in a specific method.

Operation of the apparatus employed in this recording system is relatively simple, although considerable time and effort have been spent in its development. The equipment is divided into two units—an amplifier located usually at the location of the main amplifiers and a control unit fed by the amplifier and located at the film recorder. These units are shown in Fig. 3 and Fig. 4. Adjustment of these units is simple and means are provided for checking the adjustments quickly and at fairly frequent intervals.

At the present time commercial recordings are being made with a reduction of ten decibels in the ground noise. It is expected that as more experience is gained in the use of this equipment, the noise reduction may be increased. Even ten decibels is a very noticeable reduction and permits an extension of the volume range to a point where sounds previously completely obscured in ground noise become definitely a part of the reproduction with a consequent considerable enhancing of the dramatic effect and naturalness. The practical elimination of this ground noise in the theatre gives to the audience a feeling of being present at the action and a removal of the mechanical from the sound. The average theatregoer's reaction seems to be one of finding the picture "easy to listen to" and possessing a naturalness which all but places it in the class of "original" instead of that of "reprdouction" of the recorded sound."

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A Department of Architectural Assistance Conducted By PETER M. HULSKEN, A.I.A.

The Question:

WE ARE planning the erection of a theatre in our town and desire to secure some information from you before talking with an architect. It is our intention to erect a theare with a seating capacity of 450 on the main floor, 150 in balcony, making a total of 600 up and down.

We have a lot to the rear of the three stores that measures 75x89. It is our intention to make the entrance an arcade and build behind the arcade a building, say, 48x89. Allowing two feet for the walls will give us net inside 46x87. The length being 87, and from this deduct the foyer, say, six feet, and the stage, 14, will leave 67 feet for seats. Figuring seats 30 inches from back to back will give us 20 rows of seats from foyer to within 17 feet of stage. Should we put the screen eight feet back from edge of stage, it will give a distance of 25 feet from the front seat to the screen. Isn't this ample? Should our width of the building be 46 feet inside, taking from this four three-foot aisles, which leaves 34 feet for seats. Could we make center bank of seats ten to row and two banks of six making 22 across? I have figured seats measuring 18 inches. Should we have 20 rows of seats, 22 to a row, would give us 440 main floor.

Our entrance as per drawing is 22½ feet wide. Would you suggest a ceiling say 15 feet high? We had planned on a ceiling for the auditorium to run from 21 feet low point to 24 feet high point. That is a three-foot floor slope. Isn't this ample? Our balcony we plan to be ten feet above the floor.

Our idea is to erect a straight picture house. This town is too small for road attractions. We just want a modest house that seats between 500 and 600. The building behind these stores could be built out of common brick, but the lobby and arcade could be constructed elaborate. Our arcade would be 75 feet long, as we have to go the full length before we strike our lot. This arcade could be split, say, the first part could be a lobby 22x30 feet, and a set of doors, and the second part, 45 feet, could be a promenade into the foyer, six feet, thence to the auditorium. Don't you think a building 48x49 would be ample?

The Answer:

AFTER giving your sketch careful study, it is my opinion that you can make a very attractive house on the size of your lot. You state in your letter that the theatre proper will be 48x89 feet, while your sketch shows the building to cover the entire lot, namely, 75x89 feet.

You should figure your seats not less than 20 inches in width, and as the center section of the house has the best seats, I advise you to make this section 13 seats wide, which complies with the majority of theatre building codes. Thirteen seats measure 22 feet across. Add to this three feet six inches for each aisle, making a total of seven feet, as you only need two aisles instead of four, as you mentioned, and make the side sections of four seats in a row, adding 14 feet with the thickness of the walls and clearance space for seats, leaving the over-all width 46 feet. This would leave 30 feet, or 15 feet on the east and west side, for exit purposes, which is more than required by ordinance. You will have room for 22 rows, making the lower floor seating capacity 462 seats.

It would be better to make the foyer 8 feet wide and take the extra two feet from the stage as 12 feet for stage is enough, as you mentioned that your house will be a straight picture house and not for road attractions.

I suggest that you build a solid wall behind the last row of seats up to the soffit of the balcony so as to separate the auditorium from the foyer. Place doors at the end of aisles and place windows behind center sections of seats so that the standees can see the picture while waiting.

You do not need 25 feet from screen to the front seat. If you do not care for an extra row, increase the distance from back to back of seats to 32 inches.

The Question:

WE WOULD indeed be grateful to you if you could have us furnished with some cuts or drawings that would enable us to get some idea as to what we want in the following:

We own a theatre that we built in 1929, which we find not adequate for our needs. The present seating is only 450 seats. We are thinking of remodeling and will enclose size of building and thought possibly that you may be able to get us a few drawings that we may get some ideas as to what we want in about 600 to 650 seat-house on the present site. We do not want anything that there is any cost to at this time, but just want ideas to help decide what we do want and can afford for a town of our size. However, we want an up-to-date theatre. Thanking you for anything you may do for us.—B-H. M. C.

The Answer:

AS WE have stated before, it is against the rules of this department to furnish inquirers with drawings or sketches. We may refer you to our past issues, as we have been publishing a great many interiors. Off these interiors you could get a very elaborate idea of what you might want. After you have made your decision of what would meet with your requirements relative to interior treatment, I would suggest that you consult with a theatre architect to carry out your plans.

You further state you were thinking of remodeling the theatre which you built in 1929, and you state that the seating capacity is only 450. Your enclosed sketch shows the total length of your house 140 feet long, and 40 feet wide. Off that you take 32 feet for stores, leaving only a balance of 108 feet. It would be impossible to increase your above stated seating capacity unless you install a balcony. This 108 feet does not provide for an apron or space for horns and screen, and I believe that it would be useless for you to spend any amount of money on this size of building to increase the seating capacity, as it is impossible unless you do away with your store rooms and start your auditorium as close to the front as the space required for the lobby or foyer will allow.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary considerations involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practicing architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

causes the operation of the controller. The controller, which may consist in an amplifier and any suitable circuit closing means, is connected to the associated lamp and to a power supply line. The strength of the energizing current furnished by the controller will be determined by the strength of the vibration or sound pick-up by the device. Consequently the greater the strength of the sound produced by the pipes, the stronger the light cast by the lamps will be. One lamp, or several, is provided for each individual section of the organ, and a control device is associated with each section also.

THEATRICAL organs have many different devices for producing sounds of different character, such, for example, as a section to imitate a violin, one to imitate a piano, one a xylophone and others for drums and other musical instruments. Each of these sections of the organ is arranged to be operated by a control stop or key in the console, and so, with the arrangement which I have outlined, as soon as the control stop on the console puts into operation one section of the organ, the corresponding lamp will be energized and will flood the section of the organ being used with a flickering light of suitable color, thereby calling the attention of the audience to the organ section which is causing the sound effect.

Instead of utilizing the vibration responsive device, conductors may be attached directly to the console so as to be controlled by a switch connected to the stop which actuates the associated section of the organ. When the stop is operated, the pipe may emit, for example, a sound imitating a violin. At the same time the lights are energized and caused to produce a luminous effect on the pipe, thereby calling attention to it. The closure of the stop may simply close the energizing circuit of the lamp, thereby causing it to remain lit at constant brilliancy, or the control device may be arranged in any suitable well known manner so that upon the closure of stop, a variable current is supplied to the lamp to vary its brilliancy at any predetermined frequency. Of course, it will be understood that instead of having a single lamp of one color, several lamps may be furnished. These may be of different colors, and one or more controllers may be furnished with them. It might be found desirable to utilize two lamps of different colors and have them operated by separate controllers, which are so arranged as to vary the brilliancy of the lights according to different time cycles, thereby giving changing blends of colors according to any scheme.

The system is capable of a wide variety of modifications and adaptations obvious to one skilled in the art, without, however, a departure from its essential spirit and purpose.

owners are held to warrant that a building is fit for use for which it is leased.

The lease contract was silent of the subject of repairs, except that it provides that the property owner should keep the roof of the building in repair, and that the theatre operator should keep the leased premises in as good repair as when leased, during the term of the lease, and return the leased property at the expiration of the lease to the property owner "in like good order and condition, wear and tear excepted." The contract also provided:

"It is agreed that said property and premises so leased shall be used for theatrical purposes only, and cannot be used for any other purpose without written consent of owner of the property."

The theatre operator refused to pay a portion of the rent on the contention that the Grand Opera House building was not suitable for operating a theatrical and picture show business, and, not being suitable for that purpose, and not conforming to the statutes and city ordinances, made it unlawful for the theatre operator to operate a theatre or picture show, and that the contract was therefore illegal. The repairs required by the law were widening of aisles and installation of fire escapes.

Notwithstanding this contention of the theatre operator, the higher court held the property owner entitled to collect the rent, saying:

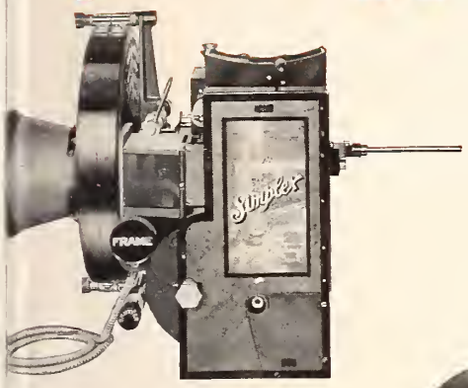
"We think the main question for determination in this suit and the controlling one is whether the law of Louisiana or the law of Mississippi applies. . . . As shown by the contract and notes set out above, the notes were payable in the state of Louisiana, being dated 'New Orleans,' but the lease is of property situated in the state of Mississippi, and the lease is the consideration for the notes. The operation of the picture shows was necessarily in Meridian, Mississippi, and the carrying out of the lease is, we think, controlled by the law of Mississippi, and that law governs the transaction throughout. . . . The lessee (theatre operator) made the contract, and, as it was not illegal to make such a contract, in our opinion, even if the building was not in a suitable condition for the purpose for which it was leased, the lessee must abide by the consequences of his contract. It may be true that the statute may prohibit the conducting of a picture show in the building in its present condition, but still, if the lessee can put it in suitable condition under the law, he must either put it in such condition, or pay the rent without the use of advantages that flow from the conducting of a picture show or theatrical business. . . . The parties must be assumed to have intended the contract to have that effect, and not to have intended to violate the law."

Unsafe Seat Construction

VARIOUS COURTS have held that negligence on the part of a theatre owner, which results in injury to a patron, may justify a jury to render a decision in favor of the injured patron.

For illustration, in the late case of Hale vs. McLaughlin Theatre (174 N. E. 506), it was disclosed that a theatre patron walked down the aisle with an usher and was shown a seat. A few seconds afterward he suddenly felt a blow on the top of his left leg near the ankle and found that the seat in front of him had been lifted up by another patron. He could not release his foot until he had lowered the seat in front of him into the position in which a person would sit in it. There was no bar to keep a person's feet from extending under the seat in front of him.

The theatre patron sued the proprietor for damages as a result of the injury.



In view of the fact that the theatre owner had neglected to provide bars on the lower rear portions of the seats, in order to safeguard patrons against injuries of this nature, the higher court held the injured patron entitled to recover $500 damages.

Sunday Show Local Option Won By Ohio

fore going to the house, receiving votes of 23 to 1 and 72 to 42, respectively.

The governor based his action on "nullification" of the ancient statute by the Ohio courts prohibiting Sunday shows which, he admitted, was violated generally by the Sunday movies and theatrical shows even with the enactment of the law into a state law, individual municipalities are vested with the power to forgive the local option according to the dictates of that community. It is unfortunate that some of the smaller communities are arranging to take advantage of this affording his signature. Governor White issued a statement which he interpreted as designed to mollify the musicians and others opposed to the measure saying:

"After careful consideration I have approved amended Senate bill No. 77, providing Sunday motion picture shows, aggregate evening playing for basketball games among other things, and the playing for basketball games among other things, and the playing of golf on Sunday afternoon and evening. The amended act now makes identical provision as to motion pictures. It is common knowledge that in the larger cities motion pictures are now indulged in generally on Sunday afternoon and evening. The majority of the citizens opposed to Sunday shows are effectively nullifying the enforcement of this law as to motion pictures, and therefore, the purpose and effect of this law is to stamp out motion pictures on Sunday, and those who wish to exercise control over local problems, in municipal communities, and those who wish to prohibit motion pictures on Sunday, do not and those who desire to permit them to be shown for educational purposes so, recreational purposes may also do so.

Much credit for the successful compromise in the legislature goes to William James, president of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, who have been untiring in their efforts to bring about this happy ending."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 103, No. 7 May 16, 1931

The Screen and Reform

THE motion picture of the future will be the leading medium of social reform, according to Mr. Wilton A. Barrett, executive secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, speaking before the Theatre Assembly at the Astor this week.

Without disagreeing with Mr. Barrett about what the future film may prove to be and do, it must be observed that the picture of today is considerably more of a reflection and cross section of the race and the audience than an influence, if we are to take the testimony of many investigators and sundry evidences. The screen art is made by the people.

No little part of the interferences and annoyances to which the industry of the motion picture is subjected, arises from the wish of various persons without a proper provocation to bring their influences to bear on the screen for the service of their special theories and purposes. Only in a relatively minor degree is that same manifestation apparent in the older art of the printed word. That is because the militants long ago gave up trying to influence all the writers and publishers, having meanwhile learned to write and get published their own expressions. It will be a vast relief and aid to the conduct of the amusement business if persons with "messages" can ever be enabled to make their own films and let the picture business be a business.

All Good Ideas

THE positive Mr. Ed Fay of Providence, experienced showman as he is, remarked with vigor in this office the other day: "What sense is there in exhibitors running football and golf pictures, just reminding their patrons of other amusements?" This raises a delicate question. We have seen several pictures made entirely indoors which reminded us of "something to do."

One Little Word

WHEN Francis (Two-Gun) Crowley, the newest of the twenty-year-old bad men, was captured in New York the other day, after a spectacular police battle in a staid apartment house district, he left in his bullet-riddled room a note addressed: "To Whom it May Concern," laden with various moronic observations. A quotation of this note appearing in the New York Times the next morning included the following with reference to motion pictures:

> wouldn't harm anything. I hadn't nothing else to do. That's why I went around bumping off cops. It's the new sensation of the films. Take a tip from me to never let a copper go an inch above your knee. They will tell you they love you but as soon as you turn your back they will club you and say "the hell with you." Now that my death is so near there is a couple of bull-

Thereupon the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., set a reporter in motion and received from the police a photographic copy of the Crowley document, in part reproduced here—obviously not including reference to film.

May 1931

To Whom It May ... I was born on the 13th ... was born on the 13 I guess it was fate that made us meet. When I die put a lily in my hand to let the boys know how they'll look. Under neath my coat will be a weary kind heart ... I had nothing else to do that's why I went around bumping off Cops. It's a new sensation for ... Take a tip from me to never let a ... go ... inch above your knee they

This was brought to the attention of the Times, and a number of papers which had picked up the reference in rewrites of the Times story, by a bulletin from the Hays office asking correction. What the Times chose to consider a correction appeared in the issue of Saturday, May 9, thus:

> A letter left in his room by Crowley quoted him as having attributed his killing of policemen to the fact that it was "a new sensation of the films." This statement was not contained in the letter, it was pointed out yesterday by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributers of America, Inc., of which Will Hays is president. The line Crowley penned actually read, "It's a new sensation of its own," it was shown by re-examination of the letter.

The Times treatment of the matter would permit one to infer that some one else external to the organization wickedly inserted the word "film." This is most unlike the Times, but is very like the common newspaper attitude of trying to assert and maintain a theory of editorial infallibility.

The more serious aspect of the matter, however, is this new expression, in one of the world's greatest newspapers, of an all too general tendency among bright young reporters and rewrite men and copyreaders to sprig up and intensify their copy beyond fact, and particularly to ride the hackneyed habit of imputing all influence of social conduct in the middle and lower classes to motion pictures. If the motion picture had so much power it would have remade the world in the last twenty years.

"IS THE MOTION PICTURE BUSINESS REALLY GETTING ANYWHERE?"

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

An examination of the current state of affairs in the motion picture industry reveals much to be disturbed about.

Naturally, during a time of widespread business depression there are adverse conditions affecting this business. Over these the industry has little or no influence. Consequently we are not referring to such conditions, but rather to those matters which lie within the ability of the industry to correct and improve.

Standing probably first in the list of things that are currently wrong with the picture business is the singular lack of common and general appeal to the established motion picture audiences of a large part of the recent product.

The sophistication of Hollywood has brought great harm to the business. There is a strong indication that among the creative talent in Hollywood there has developed a tendency to make pictures for the entertainment of each other. If this is not true there seems to be no explanation or reason for the selection of much of the story material that recently has been produced. Likewise various of the screen personalities which are now being pushed forward may seem in Hollywood to possess a very enviable subtlety and finesse but as far as the great American public are concerned they are strange, unreal creatures, too far removed from any known or knowable types.

The smart sayings of the dialogue go very well at a Hollywood first night but if the authors and directors were to observe typical audience reaction to these they would be far from pleased with their efforts. Then there are cases like that of the very good actor Ronald Colman. As far as the vast majority of the audiences of American motion picture theatres are now concerned Mr. Colman might as well be speaking in a foreign language because his typically English manner of delivery is simply not understandable to ears which are not accustomed to this character of speech. Those fundamentals of entertainment upon which the success of the picture business has been based are now too generally neglected in Hollywood.

It was a sad day for the picture business when Hollywood became sensitive over being referred to in the smart magazines as "Movie-minded."

The general character of motion picture advertising has dropped several notches down the scale of correct showmanship as applied to motion pictures.

A case in this connection which puzzles us greatly is that of Mr. Sam Katz and his associates. Mr. Katz and Mr. Barney Balaban were the presiding geniuses of the finest and probably the most successful theatrical enterprise in the history of the business. These two young men continue very distinctly on the job both as far as the Publix circuit is concerned and also the former Balaban and Katz theatres in Chicago. But many of those methods which very obviously contributed to the outstanding success of their earlier efforts have disappeared.

The character of advertising employed by the former Balaban and Katz theatres was a delight. It was so well done that it constantly attracted favorable comment among the leading advertising experts of the country. It was dignified, strong and effective. There were no cheap and sensational illustrations in it. There was no exaggeration. The theatre fronts were clean, dignified and attractive.

But the old order has passed in this case and elsewhere. Consider, for instance, the case of the Rivoli theatre, New York City. This front has been plastered recently with a cheap and sensational display which identifies it more as an old-time sideshow than as a modern motion picture theatre.

There is another strong indication of the changed state of affairs in this case. A few years ago it would have been rash and, possibly even dangerous, for anyone knowing Mr. Katz' theatre policies to have suggested a barker to bawl a line of gab in front of one of his theatres. Yet a barker has for some time been a fixture in front of the Publix Broadway houses.

The sacredness of the screen and the need of protecting it against every type of propaganda were at one time axioms in the business. But now at this critical time when the public has not yet been fully won over to the radical changes in screen entertainment which have been introduced there is the widespread practice of presenting commercial advertising upon the screen.

The public is obviously resentful of commercial advertising upon the screen.

And, it may be noted, the amusement business has never yet succeeded in an attempt to run counter to the public will.

The nickelodeon idea of a place in which to exhibit motion pictures which was thought to have been successfully interred and its requiem sung just after the turn of the century returns to plague a public which has become accustomed to an atmosphere of luxury, beauty and comfort.

In the exhibition field generally the old spirit of fighting for business has largely disappeared or has become weakened. Some time ago someone hit upon this explanation of business conditions: That a big picture does good business and that a mediocre picture does little or no business.

This explanation has permeated the whole exhibition field. When the smaller picture comes along exhibitors generally just sit back reconciled to the fact that business is not going to be good. Instead of selecting the sales points of the smaller picture and driving these home to their public, theatremen withdraw gloomily from the scene and await the coming of a picture which will fill the theatre with no particular effort on their part.

There never has been enough product that will draw automatically enough patronage to fill the theatres. And it is very unlikely that there ever will be.

The right kind of push and drive has never been more necessary in the theatre field and never, since the industry attained its present proportions, has there been so little of it.

MERIT OF PRODUCT, NOT CIRCUIT AFFILIATIONS SHOULD GOVERN BUYING OF FILMS, SAYS SCHENCK

If Endeavor Is Just to Make Pictures to Fill Playing Time and to Operate Theatres to Supply Playing Time for the Films Made the Result Is Speculative, Loew Chief States—"Distribution and Exhibition Can Be Successful Only When Conducted Singly"

By TERRY RAMSAYE

"Every theatre in the country, regardless of its affiliations, should buy pictures on their individual merit as entertainment."

With this statement, Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Loew's, Inc., centering in his Broadway office the control of both a major producing and distributing concern and a circuit of exhibition enterprises, this week prefaced a frank and vigorous discussion of vital aspects of the status of the industry today. Mr. Schenck seldom indeed speaks for publication, but remarkably enough when he does it is in the same terms, and in the same candor as in the daily conduct of business interviews across the same desk.

The Speculative Element

"The making and distribution of pictures is one business and the exhibition of them to the public is another business. Each of them can be successful only if they are conducted with a single purpose, each for itself. If endeavor is just to make pictures to fill playing time and to operate theatres to supply playing time for the pictures that are being made, each tends to compromise the other, and the result is highly speculative.

"Now we might as well admit that there is a speculative element in making motion pictures and that no organization can gather around a conference table and lay plans which will guarantee even an approximation of a one hundred per cent delivery of screen hits. If the production breaks are bad, in an organization which both produces and exhibits, the result is not one loss, but two losses.

"Every healthy business has to stand independently on its own feet, and there is a decided limit of what combinations can achieve."

This line of expression coming from Mr. Schenck assumes a special interest when one reflects that through the period in which various imposing organizations were engaged in a hurried, if not almost hysterical, campaign of theatre acquisition, he sat in corporate possession of approximately twelve millions of dollars, practically in cash, which could have been thrown into the theatre buying game with spectacular effect. It is a dispassionate observation that in consequence he and his enterprises now appear to be strikingly immune to some of the slightly dyspeptic symptoms manifest elsewhere.

Nicholas M. Schenck

"It is the policy of Loew's, Inc.," Mr. Schenck remarked, "to operate its existing theatres as theatres, and to run them for a profit as individual enterprises, not as consumers of the output of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. I don't care who runs the theatres if they are free to buy and play pictures with which they can do business. That leaves it up to makers of pictures to make good and to profit properly in terms as they may be successful in making good. After all, business can be healthy on no other basis."

Building Screen Talent

The conversation veered to production, with some of the usual observations of sources of material. Mr. Schenck seemed to view no special source of material with any special favor, whether it be the printed page of book, magazine, legitimate stage play, or original script. In the main, he seemed to hold against a sometimes prevalent tendency of the industry to cast about in pursuit of ready made fame in players and vehicles, pointing out that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has, in the main, presented players who achieved their greatness on the screen, and that a very high percentage of the output of the concern has been from original stories, observing in passing that various pieces of material, among them "Grand Hotel" and Private Lives" which had been acquired for production before they had gone to the public, have achieved as much success as many "hits" of the stage.

In passing, Mr. Schenck took occasion to pay special tribute to the ability and diligence of Irving Thalberg of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production staff, remarking "I am not sure whether there is any such thing as a genius, or not, but if there is a genius, he is. Part of his extraordinary ability is in the terrific rate at which he can work. He reads stories about ten times as fast as the ordinary reader and he knows what he has

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

THE journey to the heights is usually a long and hard one, in the motion picture business as well as in other lines, and, by the same token, the trip back is likely to be sudden and swift. Hollywood has seen many of these ups and downs. They are the result of many causes, but perhaps the most frequent—in Hollywood at least—is magalocephalia, which develops into begalomania. That means, in English, swelled head, becoming acute.

Some years ago, among the laborers on one of the big lots, was a young man who had ambitions. His work at that time was feeding fuel into the big incinerators on the lot. He was a first-class fuel-feeder. He was transferred to other jobs and did them well. He had some education and acquired more. Then he felt that he could write.

He tried, and succeeded, to a degree. The cycle of gangster pictures came around. The young man wrote one for a major company. It was good—one of the best of the season's crop. It brought him an offer to go back to the lot on which he had been a laborer.

Here he wrote another story. He also directed it. And it made a good picture, so good that the critics did quite a rave about it and the studio heads rewarded the young man with a bonus, a vacation and a trip to Europe, all expenses paid. Also he was to direct more pictures when he came back.

Well, he came back—and how. He had read the reviews of his picture and he believed what they said about the great direction. He had turned these opinions over and over in his mind all the time he was away. He came back, distinctly megalocephalic. He would speak to some of the big shots, but many old friends were passed up. It was decided that a little discipline might help a bit. So the megaphone is hung away for a time, and he is a writer again. Maybe, if he learns, he'll direct again later. If he doesn't—well, others have gone the same way.

An Old Spanish Custom!

The first effort of the Hollywood agents for artists is to organize themselves—a natural and necessary start for the end which will come in time of satisfactory relations between the studios and the agents.

But among the hundred and more agents there are excellent functionaries and unethical ones; and the bad boys are already running true to form. Foreseeing the strict code of ethics that is bound to result—and before the rules go into effect—they are out on the highways and byways signing up all the talent they can lead up to the dotted line.

An old practice in the film business.

In the very early days the film exchanges were also running amuck, in numbers and practices. They were cutting each other's throats as well as the producers' and something had to be done.

The wise and strong armed giant of those days was J. J. Kennedy, organizer of the General Film Company. He got the exchangemen together one day in his downtown, New York, office and held them there until they signed a new set of rules.

It was past seven in the evening when the last John Henry was affixed to the papers; and then suddenly an exchangeman arose.

"Mr. Kennedy," he asked, "can I use your telephone booth outside? I promised to take my wife to the theatre tonight and I must reach her at once."

Kennedy smiled. "Sure," said he, "but you don't mean to telephone your wife. You'll call up your partner in Pittsburgh, tell him what you've done, that he has 24 hours leeway before the new rules obtain and to hustle out and sign up all the exhibitors he can reach."

The exchangeman sat down. "Well," he grinned, "you called the turn, all right."

Efficiency Item

THE industry generally is warned about entering games of chance involving dice, with Beverly Jones of Pathe fame.

The dexterous Mr. Jones was recently confronted with the production of a series of pictures on backgammon. To save studio time and insure the desired results in play before the camera, he engaged in exhaustive research with dice and their conduct under the law of gravity when internally loaded with mercury.

The screen results while satisfactory are said to be trivial as compared with the earning powers that Mr. Jones has developed with the property dice.

VINCE BARNETT, champion "ribber," the man who has created as much misery and embarrassment as any practical joker, got a dose of his own medicine in Hollywood the other day. And it all happened on Vince's wedding day.

There are a lot of people in Hollywood who had suffered from Barnett's "ribbing" and when they heard of the forthcoming ceremony they swore vengeance. So when Vince and his bride stepped from the church the trouble began.

At the church steps a summons was handed Vince, ordering him to court to defend a divorce suit. He stuffed the paper into his pocket and broke for the automobile. He didn't notice the sign—a big one—on the back of the car, which read:—'Barnett gets a rib at last."

The wedding breakfast was at the Roosevelt and as Vince stepped out of the car and turned to help his bride, he was pushed rudely aside and someone snarled:

"You say! Don't you know yet how to help a lady out of a car?"

On the steps of the hotel stood a blonde and as Vince started up the steps with Mrs. Barnett, the blonde threw her arms about him, burst into tears and wailed:—

"Vince how could you."

Vince gritted his teeth, and, dragging his bride, rushed across the lobby and to the dining room. On the mezzanine he found a group of his "friends," headed by Sue Carol, Nick Stuart, Johnny Hines, Winnie Lightner and other film notables who have at times been the objects of the Barnett attentions. Also awaiting him were two large male persons, one of whom stepped forward and placed Vince under arrest for wife desertion. They started to take him out, but Barnett grabbed the stair railing and hung on until it seemed as if both he and the railing must go. He saved himself a long walk, for the plan was to drive him to the top of the Hollywood hills and leave him there.

At the wedding breakfast several Barnett understudies played waiters and inflicted on him practically every torture he has in past years tried on others. Vince was game, but he had wilted visibly before the breakfast was over. He finally asked for mercy, but none was forthcoming, and it was a rather weary bridegroom who finally stepped into the car to go to Palm Springs for the honeymoon.

INCREASED PROTECTION ASKED BY CIRCUITS ALARMS MEMBERS OF MPTO

Another Headache

Campaigns used in connection with juvenile pictures have aided tremendously in bringing back youngsters to the theatre, but simultaneously have given major interests another problem to wrestle with—the loss of adult patronage at shows where juvenile features, such as "Skippy," are featured.

Managers of Publix houses, for instance, have been warned to steer clear of misdirected campaigns when playing juvenile attractions, because of the great dent made in box office receipts as a result of the lack of adult appeal.

Fox Circuit Division Heads On Direct Contact Tours

Division managers of Fox circuit have been ordered "to the front," visiting each theatre in their respective divisions to assist local managers in devising means for increasing patronage.

One of the problems to be treated is represented in admission prices. The Fox organization has adopted the stand that local prices cannot be settled by the home office, but must be based on local conditions and therefore be fixed by the theatre manager with the advice of his division manager.

"U's" Home Office Knows Nothing of Economy Move

Executives of Universal's New York home office yesterday stated they are unaware of the reported drastic economy move at Universal City studio, where studio chiefs and executive personnel are said to have been asked to take a 25 per cent salary cut. Reduction of the company's working force was also mentioned in the yarn from the Coast.

Victor Schertzinger to Direct Four for Radio

Hollywood—Victor Schertzinger will direct four vehicles for Radio Pictures. Already finished is "Woman Between." "Sphinx Has Spoken" now is in preparation, while "Bird of Paradise," starring Dolores Del Rio, and "Marcheta," a forthcoming Richard Dix vehicle, will complete the group.

Russia Slates 50 Talkers; To Make Own Reproducers

Moscow—The Stalin government plans to produce 50 talking pictures in 1931 for reproduction by means of a nationally made apparatus now being developed by Professors Ramanoff, Tager and Charine.

Already, it is pointed out, there are 112 talking pictures devoted to public health.

Sales Managers Slapped for Favoring Old System

Questions Honesty of Circuits With Regard to Their Statements That Films Pass Too Quickly Into 2nds

Circuits, producer-owned and independent, are further aggravating the protection situation by asking for and receiving from distributors additional coverage, it is charged by the MPTOA, in its official bulletin for members. The situation has now become a grave one, it is stated.

"Last season," the bulletin charges, "under press from the banking interests, the various producers sought a quick return on their film investments. Protection for 90 or 120 days delayed the final accounting three or four months. The order went forth to curtail protection, and C. C. Pettijohn, acting for the producers, made an effort to rearrange the protection system to meet the new conditions."

"But throughout the year," the bulletin continues, "the chain houses have been conducting a campaign for a return to the old system. They argued that their decreased business was due to the fact that the pictures passed too quickly to the subsequent runs. The honesty of the statement may be questioned.

"The Sales Angle"

"Sales managers, keenly appreciative of the ease of swap bookings with other circuits and bulk contracts from the independent chains, are more or less in favor of a return to the old system. Their own circuits are demanding protection. To obtain this from other producers they must offer the same concession. And they still seem to labor under the delusion that the circuits alone are important and must be catered to.

"This fallacy has repeatedly been exploded. Bookings sufficient to protect the producer against heavy losses on his production may be obtained from the comparatively few big chains, but the profits are obtained almost wholly from the independent bookings which follow.

"Surveys have shown that from 30 to 40 per cent of the rentals come from the subsequent runs and not merely the 10 or 15 per cent which has been used so frequently that it has come to be accepted as fact. This rental business represents the gain on the product. Unless it is obtained the balance sheets will show a loss.

"Depriving the subsequent runs of product sufficiently recent to be sold at a profit will reduce their revenues to the point where they must either book pictures at cheaper rentals or close their establishments.

"It will be recalled that when Western Electric announced its plan to supply sound

Los Angeles—A reporter for Universal (Hearst) Service visited Fifi Dorsay the other day to verify her engagement to Terrence Ray, film player.

Fifi talked and the reporter scribbled, and the story "made" the local papyri and went out over Universal wires.

Quoting Fifi, it read:

Deny Product Famine in Britain; See 400 Talkers

London—British exhibitors will not face a shortage of product this season, it is declared in London trade circles in denying statements of G. A. Atkinson, writer on the Daily Telegraph, to the effect that not more than 200 pictures will be available, though 500 are needed.

Instead, it is estimated that over 200 feature talkers have already been trade shown and that on the basis of normal extension of production activity as the season progresses, this number will be swelled to well over 400 feature talkers alone, besides a fairly large number of silents.

Plot to Blast Four Coast Theatres Revealed at Trial

Sacramento, Cal.—Plots to dynamite two theatres in Sacramento and one each in Fresno and Roseville were revealed today by Arthur Rondel, private detective, a witness in the trial here of four film operators charged with conspiracy to dynamite a Sacramento playhouse.

The men on trial are W. R. Federolfe, head of the local film operators' union; Hiram Reynolds, Joe Apathy and H. M. Addie.

Does NEW YORK Exist? a Hollywood Query

The Chasm Between EAST AND WEST

By WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

THE title of this little story might be "Never the Twain Shall Meet."

Let us hope they may—some day. But, at least, a good way to bring about a meeting is a word of introduction.

The "twain" referred to are New York and Hollywood, Eastern and Western headquarters of the motion picture industry, one end making the goods, the other financing and selling them. They are separated by some 3,000 miles—quite a gap between the functions of a fast moving industry dealing in a weekly turnover of so ephemeral and intangible a product as entertainment. Quite a gap—but miles alone can't possibly express the large distance that prevails.

It is a distance of terrific misunderstanding, one that continuously breeds tempers, outbursts, and costly errors.

A joke prevailed some time ago founded upon the rumor that the telegraph companies had ruled against the use of the word "lousy."

"How then," a cry went up, "is New York to talk to Hollywood?"

But it's no joke to the business man—this tremendous chasm between the high-strung daily operations of a big modern industry. That interesting pit gobbles up into its vastness millions of dollars worth of waste motion.

It may be that New York, in time, may get at least a beginner's idea of Hollywood; but, after nearly two years' residence in Studioland, it seems hopeless to the writer that Hollywood, save only the executives imported here, will ever realize New York's existence.

Tell a home-loving Englishman that there is anything worthwhile outside the great little isles of Britain and you'll get an utterly blank look for your pains. You get the same expression in Hollywood when you labor to explain the other great functions of theatres and distribution, how they head into the big executive offices of the metropolis and how the heavy machinery provides the wherewithal for Hollywood's vast payroll.

So these few words are written wholly for New York's elucidation: and then only in a rudimentary way.

"This Hollywood is a crazy place!" I observed to a friend one day.

"Well, yes," said he, "of course. But—do you remember in our old writing days in New York, we considered an actors' boarding house to be a crazy place? Most anything might happen there. Well, Hollywood after all is just an actors' boarding house; big, that's all."

And another said: "Hollywood is just a great perennial circus—a gigantic carnival. The big tent tops the show from Western avenue to Beverly Hills. Hollywood boulevard is the midway plaisance, with concessions, visitors, workers, parasites and sharpshooters. And the big brass band plays right along."

Which is a pretty fair parallel. The Hollywood sun rises and sets—right in Hollywood. It is a tight little world. "And all without—is without."

Hollywood puffs its chest and says: "What does New York know about making pictures?"

And New York grits its teeth and says: "What does Hollywood know about anything?"

And there is a considerable basis for each query.

A top producing executive here told me of the recent visit of a top executive from New York. Now, the latter has probably viewed every feature picture ever released, appraised with keen, practical eye its audience value and routed it accordingly, to the tune of hundreds of million dollars in box office cash.

"Do you know," said the Hollywood genius with admirable candor, "this man astounded me. He actually knows pictures. Why—he actually talks like a producer."

The two men became almost friendly. But I recall the New York man several years ago, when he got a Hollywood wire from the other. It was during the severe labor troubles at the studios. "Don't worry," said the wire, with Hollywood glibness, "I'll hold the fort here against all odds."

The New York man became apoplectic with rage. It was his deep impression that New York was holding the Hollywood fort right along to the extent of some $20,000,000 a year sent in weekly installments to keep the fort together. "He'll hold it—will he!" yelled the New Yorker, as he tore the paper to shreds.

Of course the Hollywood man was sincere in his belief that the supreme thing was to continue to send pictures to New York so it could continue to exist.

It was nice of him to think at all of New York. Aside from the executives Hollywood doesn't think about New York—or any other place.

Hollywood's first thought is a job and a salary; that is also Hollywood's second thought. The third thought is one of vanity; and there it ends.

There are 3,500 players in Hollywood whose names are more or less known. And there is continuous employment for little more than 500. There are 300 directors and four hundred writers for a feature output of 400 pictures a year.

So the good jobs are few and the salaries spectacularly, gorgeously, high; and vanity measures up to the salaries.

Hollywood craves publicity, but is just as insular in its viewpoint of publicity as it is of everything else. The avenues of picture publicity are worldwide, as we well know. In this country thousands of theatres are using names and personality stories to get the millions up to the box office, and competent photoplay editors of the daily press of the United States are telling the public of the people of the screen. In Europe, Australia, Egypt, South Africa, the interest is quite as keen. Altogether, it is the largest, most vital outpouring of publicity this old world has ever seen.

Yet Hollywood's publicity eye sees no further than Hollywood's publicity nose. If an item, important or innocuous, appears locally, Hollywood naively believes the whole world has been encompassed. For that item must reach the eye of the boss, and the boss hands out the jobs.

Hollywood works hard. If New York thinks otherwise, New York is mistaken. I know of men here who never get home to dinner and to whom a recreation such as golf is unknown, men who gray and all but crack under the strain of making entertainment that clicks and at the same time matching the costly regime of a huge factory against the outcry and exactions of the money bags of the East, men who look back with longing to the business hours of New York and the old luncheon relaxation of the Hotel Astor.

Finally, Hollywood is a creative place—just that and nothing more. Creative folk can be nothing more or less and still be creative. The New York executive who told me his dearest wish was to take Hollywood by the nape of its neck and

Although Film Issues Are Heaviest Point Losers

RKO's $9,021,970 Depreciation is Smallest Loss in the Entire Amusement Group

The six principal motion picture issues on the New York Stock Exchange dropped $125,879,532 in market value during the April bear market, but, due to the comparatively moderate number of shares outstanding in the film group, this was the smallest depreciation of any of the leading groups on the board, comparing with a loss of $539,778,126 in the six principal industrials, $363,201,402 in utilities, $226,079,870 in oils and $131,443,747 in rails.

These figures, based on the market action of the six leading stocks in each of the respective groups, show that the film stocks were the heaviest losers in numbers of points for the group as a whole, mainly because of wide declines in Fox, Paramount and Loew's, which were prominent bear targets during that month of heavy short selling.

However, the bluest of the market's "blue chips," U. S. Steel, lost six points more than Fox on the month, while the largest drops in the picture group were equalled or exceeded by premier issues in other sections of the list, including such highly rated shares as American Can, American Telephone and Telegraph, New York Central and Union Pacific.

15,000,000 Film Shares Out

With the six film issues running up a collective total of only 14,952,383 shares outstanding, the market value depreciation was comparatively moderate in view of the fact that the six industrial issues had a total of 105,669,853 shares outstanding, the utilities 66,539,826 shares and the oils 61,399,521 shares and the rails 32,116,385 shares.

Due to the series of bear raids against the issue, Paramount was the largest loser in the film group for the month, $38,523,696 in market value of the stock being wiped out in a decline of 12⅜ points. Fox lost the most in number of points, 13⅞, and dropped $33,656,032 in market value.

Warners, with more stock outstanding than any of the other film shares, showed a loss of $16,483,219, while General Theatres and Loew's sold off $14,002,447 and $14,191,170 in market value, respectively. Demonstrating the strong support afforded the stock during the reactionary period, RKO showed the smallest depreciation in the group, $9,021,968.

These figures compare with the following market valuation losses in leading stocks in other sections of the list: U. S. Steel $172,662,770, American Telephone $125,695,584, Standard Oil of New Jersey $114,833,052, Consolidated Gas $80,272,773, Union Carbide $78,756,501 and General Motors $70,687,500.

Although theatre grosses remain slightly under a year ago, they are now becoming more steady than they were in 1930. This fact is brought out in a tabulation of box office receipts published since March, 1930, with the above graph based on comparative figures for the eight weeks from the second week in March to the first week in May inclusive. It will be noted in this chart that the theatre during the Lentern period in 1930 suffered a more protracted period of depression than it did this year. Whereas business dropped 15 per cent in 1930 during Lent, 1931 gained with a decrease of only 10 in grosses, a fact which substantiates a survey published by the MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The series will be produced at Educational Coast studios.

Visugraphic Claims Audience of 25 Million in Ten Months

What is claimed to be an indication of public acceptance of advertising pictures is contained a report issued by Visugraphic Pictures, which shows that in a 10-month period, more than 24,800,000 people saw commercial shorts made by that company.

The report, prepared by Mrs. Marie Barrell, manager of Visugraphic's distribution, and said to be based upon signed statements from managers, revealed the following:

Total number of showings in this period.

Theatrical—27,942: Attendance—19,919,-282.

Non-theatrical — 13,184: Attendance — 4,-894,578.

Sarnoff, Brown, Rothafel Arrive on Coast for Confab

Hollywood (QP)—David Sarnoff, Hiram Brown and S. L. ("Roxy") Rothafel arrived here on Thursday to inspect the Radio and RKO Pathe studios and to confer with production executives regarding new season's production schedules.

The visit is Sarnoff's first to the RKO lot.

One Up on Reno

Hollywood — Following hurriedly called confabs and much heated discussion, Radio executives junked the title, "Waiting at the Church" and in its place selected "Take This Woman."

The publicity department, here and at New York, breathlessly informed the world of the change.

Followed more hurriedly called confabs and much more heated discussion, and, within 48 hours after the switch, Radio executives junked the title, "Take This Woman," and in its place selected "Waiting at the Church."

Germans Demand End of Quota Law Ask Low Rentals

Berlin—Abolition of all quota restrictions and resumption of complete international competition, is demanded by the German exhibitors' association, C. E. A., through its president, Herr Scheer. Only by competition can reasonable prices be assured, he told the big Munich convention of the organization.

Cheaper rentals are demanded as a complementary sequence to the announcement of Klangfilm, that it is preparing to bring out apparatus for the smaller and medium-sized theatres at a price of $1,400.

The C. E. A. passed resolutions at Munich also demanding to correct abuses of censorship, abolition of "blind-booking," and reduction in fees for talking equipment licenses.

Yates' Patent Action Against Saland Opens

Wilmington—Leon Gaumont, one of France's foremost motion picture men is the center of interest in the patent suit trial which started in U. S. District Court here on Wednesday. The suit involves developing and drying machines Gaumont invented for films in 1909.

While Gaumont is not in court, his depositions will be submitted by the plaintiff, Cinema Patents (H. J. Yates-Consolidated Film). Defendants are Craft Film Laboratories, Steven J. Devoe, Flushing, N. Y., Harry Glickman, Brooklyn, and Nat Saland of Long Island.

The suit is based on the alleged infringements of two patents issued in 1916 to Gaumont, one for developing films, and the other for drying films.

Gaumont had applied for his patents in 1909 when the industry was in its infancy, but he did not receive his patents until seven years later, and one of his patents, that for drying films, was later assigned to the Societé Etablissements Gaumont of Paris. Both patents later were assigned to the plaintiffs it is contended.

Counsel for the plaintiff opened the case with an explanation of the patents, describing the methods of sending films through the developing, fixing and hypo-bath and then through the drying cabinets.

Herbert A. Huebner, counsel for Cinema Patents, yesterday claimed thousands of handymen and mechanics are violating the general patents.

Cinema Patents conceded that Craft had legally acquired 26 Gaumont machines, but the question at issue is whether reconstruction of these machines constitute infringement of the patents now said to be held by plaintiff.

WIDE MOVE IN PARAMOUNT STOCK; FOX REPORT MAY CREATE PRECEDENT

Release of Annual Fox Statement Scheduled for May 25, With Meeting on June 10

In what is expected to establish an accounting precedent for other motion picture companies, the Fox Film Corporation will issue some time before May 25 its annual report, containing a higher basis of depreciation on new films. In addition, the company will submit a report in which the former system of accounting is used.

Changing conditions in the industry, it is reported, will result in other units falling into line and using faster depreciation schedules. Among these conditions are mentioned the shorter average run of features and the keen competition among the large producers.

Not satisfied with presenting the report only on the figures prepared for bankers, the company has had a report made up under the system used in 1929, a step that has resulted in three postponements of the annual stockholders' meeting, which, according to the rules of the New York Stock Exchange, cannot be held before the annual report is issued.

Originally scheduled for April 15, the meeting was adjourned to May 1 and then to May 15, when it was postponed to June 10 to enable the annual report to be issued 15 days before the meeting, making the date for the report about May 25.

When both annual reports are issued, each will show a considerable difference in earnings figures, this because the system of accounting used by the bankers in the recent new financing, which forms the basis of one report, charges off amortization of a film in one year; whereas, the second report has been computed on

Other Issues Move in Narrow Channels, With Trading Light in Warners

By THE ANALYST

Day-to-day fluctuations in motion picture stocks were rather narrow during the past week, but special situations brought about wide moves in individual issues and attention was focused largely on Fox and Paramount, the former selling off to a new record low from which it later recovered somewhat, while the latter maintained a steady tone with all the bad news in connection with the dividend cut out of the way. In fact, the reduction in the annual payment on the stock from $4 to $2.50 was more moderate than had been looked for in many quarters.

The speculative community was not at all pleased with the third postponement of the Fox annual meeting and nervous selling of the stock was on for most of the week.

Issues allied with Fox also were in large supply as a result of the unfavorable impression created by the delay in getting up the 1930 earnings statement, and wide declines were made by General Theatres common on the Stock Exchange, the preferred on the curb and the company's 6 per cent convertible issue on the bond market.

Pressure on Paramount in the preceding week had about discounted the reduction in the dividend rate.

Turnover in the other film shares was comparatively light and, in view of the action in other sections of the list, what with Steel and other blue chips selling off to new lows, action of the picture shares indicated no important

Silents Decrease On British Mart

The number of features, both sound and silent, was exactly the same as a year ago.

Turning on the Heat

For the exploitation campaign on a certain widely discussed current release of a major distributor appears a warning to exhibitors to avoid in their ballyhoo all "phrases that refer to the American home-phrases laying too much stress on the family and children angles; or cold, idealistic copy."

"Instead," states the company's instructions to theatre owners, "use copy that smacks of personality and conflict between man and woman; of warm love and jealousy; ambition and desire. Use the figure of the girl to sell youth appeal. A number of catchlines appear in this bulletin which sell the title."

And, so Mr. Exhibitor turns over a few pages and finds these "warm love and jealousy" catchlines, among others:

"What man sows—woman reaps!"

"Revealing the stark, amazing truth about marriage!"

"Alone, she raised five splendid children—only to lose them to the stranger who was their father!"

"One, the mother of his children, the other his inspiration!" Etc., etc.

First to Double-Feature, Montreal Can't Quit Now

Montreal—Montreal, the birthplace in Canada of the twin-bill policy, has more theatres offering double-feature programs as a regular plan than all the rest of Canada put together, and since for years many local exhibitors have offered double film fare, now they could not get away from it if they wanted to.

Current amusement pages in Montreal newspapers carry the advertisements of 27 theatres, and 24 of them announced twin bills, the exception being the Palace, Loew's and the Princess. Two of the leading Famous Players' houses, the Capitol and the Imperial, are regularly presenting double features. All theatres of United Amusements Limited, which has a booking affiliation with Famous Players, have twin bills, and there are 19 United houses in Montreal. With one exception, the Consolidated and Confederation theatre groups also offer twin bills. Of the 40 other theatres not represented in the daily newspaper advertising, every one of them regularly offers double-features.

Editors Launch Fight on Sponsored Films and Acts

Columbus—Vigorous opposition to sponsored films has been launched by the Ohio Newspaper Association. At its meeting here, advertising on screen and stage was characterized as "cheap and pilfering" in an adopted resolution which called on each member to withhold beneficial comment concerning any theatre that presented such material, and to point out sponsored films and acts to their readers "so that they may not pay admission, expecting entertainment and yet be subjected to the unfair methods of certain greedy film interests."

New Continuous Projector Shown

Madrid—Carlos Mendizabal Brunet, of Palo (Malaga), has invented and exhibited before engineers of the School of Mines a projector called the "Kinisophote," which machine runs continuously and the screen receives a constant amount of light, thus doing away with flickering. It suppresses the Maltese cross and allows the use of very thin (cellophane) film, driven by only one side of the film being perforated. The sound groove is placed in a 5-millimeter space, so that the section for pictures retains its normal one-inch width without narrowing. The film is driven at a constant speed at every point, so that the sound impression can be taken up anywhere. Instead of being 75 holes distant from the corresponding figures, it can be placed immediately opposite them, thus avoiding the difficulties arising from cuts and repairs. Finally, after being wound up as usual during projection, the film is not re-wound, but is picked out from the inside of the reel to be projected again. This operation is done by conical rollers.

TROUBLE AHEAD UNLESS COSTS OF PRODUCTION ARE CUT AT STUDIOS

British Producer Warns Against Heavy Budgets

$200,000 to $250,000 Grossed in England From Domestic Films Costing $75,000

The British motion picture industry is at least a year behind the United States.

British producers have at last become convinced that the film business is a commercial business just the same as any other industry.

They at last realize the handicap under which they work because of the limited number of theatres available and they are keeping their costs down to rock bottom.

American producers may soon find themselves in the same position out of which British producers have been trying for four years to work themselves; that is, with bad business in theatres and diminishing grosses, over which costs may run ahead of income.

These are the views of John A. Thorpe, director and general manager of British International Pictures, now in Hollywood.

"I am here to learn what I can," he said, "especially about new developments in sound. We are far behind this country in the matter of sound recording. For instance, we have no noiseless recording equipment, nor have we any of the ribbon mikes.

"We now are down to a common sense basis at Elstree. We realize that we must keep our costs down if we are to make any money in the limited number of houses to which we can sell our product. There are only about 2,500 theatres over there and 600 of them are controlled by Gaumont and are therefor closed to us. We have a market in South Africa, but little if any profit there. We make a little profit in Australia. Canada is practically closed to us because of Paramount. So, with only the home theatres to draw from, we must keep costs down.

"It is only the extraordinary picture on which we are able to spend more than $75,000, but for that we can turn out a picture that will compare favorably with an American picture costing two to three times as much. We can gross anything up to $200,000 or even $250,000 with such pictures.

"Not long ago the word 'British' on a picture was a stigma, was a liability instead of an asset. That has been changed. Our exhibitors will take our average picture in preference to an American average production and make more money with it. Motion pictures is a commercial business now in England and is being run as such. We cannot and do not attempt to pay the salaries you pay over here. We haven't your big stars, but we have the entire West End stage to draw from and this, except for the matter of ingenues, has the best material in the world. Ingenues, I admit, are scarce.

Welford Beaton's Farewell To His Beloved Son

Hollywood—The funeral of one of Hollywood's most popular and best loved characters was held last week. From the moment the news of Donald Beaton's death got abroad the Welford Beaton home in the Hollywood hills was literally deluged with telegraphic and floral tributes from the high and mighty of filmdom. For Donald's friends were legion.

He was known and loved for his writings, as associate editor of his father's paper, the Film Spectator. He was equally well known and loved for the almost super-human fight he had waged, on crutches and in bed, for four years against the ravages of a strange tropical disease which struck him down while he was still in his 'teens. He was known and loved by hundreds of stars and directors and writers and producers who had sat at the dinner table with him in his father's home. All Hollywood knew Donald Beaton as an extraordinary boy.

When the minister who conducted the funeral services in the Little Church of the Flowers asked Welford Beaton a day or two before the funeral if there was anything the minister could say for the stricken father, or whether the father wished to write any message, Welford Beaton said he was afraid he could not write anything for a few days. But in the still hours that night he sat in his study and penned a farewell note about Donald, and the minister used it to conclude his funeral oration. And this is what a father said about his son:

"We were writers together, he and I, and perhaps it would please him if I wrote a note that he could take with him to the throne of God.

"I think I know the things they value at the throne of God, and I'm sure that Donald takes them with him. He leaves to us, to his mother and sisters and me, a vast estate of golden memories of kind things done on earth. This legacy is not ours alone, and we would not keep it if we could, for everywhere he went throughout his life he scattered seeds from which sweet memories grew for each of those who knew what a charming boy he was, what a loyal friend and what a brave soldier.

"It is 'Happy Landings!' that we say to him today, and we keep our faces to the sun, our heads up, our smiles confident, for it is a strong man who is taking-off for over there. We do not worry, for we know that he has everything to carry him straight through to the landing field for lives well-lived on earth."

Fox Loses Lease Judgment

Gold and Herman Segal against Fox, in which plaintiffs recovered judgment against Fox for a one year's lease on premises at 1315-17 Vine St., which Fox vacated as its exchange on April 30, 1926, without giving three months' written notice as provided in the lease. The rental was $7,200 a year.

BRITISH MARKET AWAITS SOMETHING NEW AS STIMULANT FOR BOX OFFICE

It Worked

Louisville, Ky.—George W. Warren was arrested for being in a state of intoxication (not Kentucky), and acting police judge, Neill Funk, placed him under a $100 peace bond and ordered him to attend "The Secret Six" at Loew's State to garner a needed moral. The judge gave him a ticket, having seen a preview the night before. The story received a good proportion of reader attention and newspaper space. It developed that it was just another smart publicity stunt pulled by Walter McDowell, manager of Loew's and his assistant, George Hunt. Which is pretty clever work, at that!

Phila. Readies for Shows on Sundays

Philadelphia—"Blue" law opponents are elated over their first major victory in the passage through the House of an amendment to the Schwartz bill, which permits Sunday baseball.

Last week, a vote was taken on a similar amendment, which was defeated by the close margin of 101 to 99. The bill, however, was saved for a second reading and Representative Sowers, Philadelphia, submitted another rider which was passed by a vote of 103 to 99.

The bill will now go to the upper house, where it seems certain to be passed. It is expected that Governor Pinchot, who has stated his unqualified antagonism to any change in the "blue" laws of 1794, will veto the measure, but the chances are extremely strong for a ratification over his veto.

With the prospects of legalized Sunday baseball, theatre interests in town view Sunday pictures as a logical step. Already a campaign has been organized with this objective in view. With Sunday professional baseball a fact, it seems unlikely that there will be discrimination against Sunday shows.

Theatre Earnings Start To Wane in England

Renters Are Using Block Booking For Salvaging, Although Law Prohibits That Practice

By W. H. MOORING

London—There are indications that when box-office returns of American product now running or on offer here, filter through to New York, someone will get a terrific shock.

Without painting the picture at its blackest, motion picture earnings are falling heavily on this market.

With a few exceptions, subjects of anything above program category, pre-released in the West End during the past two months, have sadly disappointed their backers, and throughout the whole country there is a definite tendency towards lighter grosses.

Not only are exhibitors asking for lower percentage terms—and in many, many instances getting them fairly easily—but returns from which the renters must take their pickings are drooping badly.

Some six months ago it became apparent that the end of the talker boom had been passed, and indications then were that the dialogue picture, having reached a rational basis, a period of stabilized business could be expected. But now there is no doubt whatever that values have fallen much below earlier estimates, and are still falling.

In the West End of London recently several pictures for which powerfully expensive press campaigns have been undertaken, have failed to bring anything approaching expected returns, and exhibitors are being advised through their association that London pre-releases are a useful gauge in determining the possible earnings of these subjects in territorial theatres.

Among the attractions heralded by America as big, to be shown afterwards in the West End without living up to expectations were Radio's "Cimarron," Chaplin's "City Lights," "The Bat Whispers" (shown on Magnifilm), "Playboy of Paris" and "Beau Ideal" to mention just a few.

The immediate effect of a West End disappointment is to inspire exhibitors all over the country to hold out for lower percentage terms. In several instances where salesmen have been sent out to get 40% to 50%, they have had to take as low as 25% with the rest of the bill thrown in, and the leading circuits are now holding out for 25% on pictures which have had a very favorable press reception, insisting also on supplementary features, and publicity aids thrown in.

Net result of the panic is that renters are trying to save their faces by block booking, which although against the law since the passing of the quota measure, is being freely done in all directions. In this manner

And Now!

Louisville, Ky.—In a suit to break the will of the late Daniel F. Reidhar, who left an estate of $750,000, witnesses testified that the deceased was so stingy that he hung around the National and other theatres, until 9:30 in the evening, or until the box office would close, so as to get into the theatres without paying an admission. Reidhar, son of a bank president, was said to have worn one coat for 20 years. He had a mania for saving money and went without all the comforts of life in order to save. While thoroughly enjoying shows he never enjoyed them sufficiently to pay to see them, if there was any way in which he could slip past the door, the court was told.

CHAPLIN TALKS WITH OWN MUSIC

The genius of music and pantomime in step toward new art

By JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

THERE was once a certain imaginative and cerebral scribbler of verse and metaphysical articles who attracted some attention by writing a quaint piece called "The Ancient Mariner," which is still to be found in "fifth readers." Being somewhat addicted to seeing things when he heard sounds, they called him "The Sublime Somnambulist." When listening to the Funeral March and Heroic Symphony of Beethoven he saw a procession in dark purple.

Conversely, the Teutonic composer responsible for the Heroic Symphony, although stone deaf the latter part of his life, heard many things when he gazed upon the world about him and put those sounds into harmonious hieroglyphics for posterity. Both Beethoven and Coleridge achieved some fame which, strangely, has endured for more than a century.

For some peculiar reason the great creative minds of the noble art of making pictures hop, skip, jump and fade out while sounds, harmonious and cacophonous, assail the ether, the film and the tympanum, do not seem to take seriously the wedding of Sight and Sound. While Sight steps out with his rowdy bachelor-day companions, Sound goes her own way, occasionally condescending to grace the parties of her hubby in the way she should, but more often kicking up her heels scandalously and ruining the party.

It is rather gratifying, therefore, to find such an eminent protagonist of the art of making pictures hop, skip and do tricks as Mr. Charles Chaplin making a sincere endeavor to maintain the traditions of motion pictures while coalescing the individual entities of Sight and Sound in an understanding and mutually helpful union.

Mr. Chaplin has chosen to express himself vocally through what has been termed the "universal language"—music. The eminent mime is fortunate in being able to give tonal reinforcement—even interpretation—to his pantomime with quite a measure of success, due to his own undoubted musical talent, for he is credited with creating most of the music used in "City Lights" in addition to supervising the scoring and synchronizing of the production, in which he was assisted by Arthur Johnson of the Irving Berlin organization.

"City Lights" confirms the reports of his intuitive musicianship, for the scoring bears the hallmark of his whimsical genius. His idiosyncrasies run rampant throughout revealing tonal eccentricities which keep step with his shuffling feet, his agile antics and his merry moments, while emphasizing the pathos, the irony and the satire that underlie even the most uproarious comedy situations.

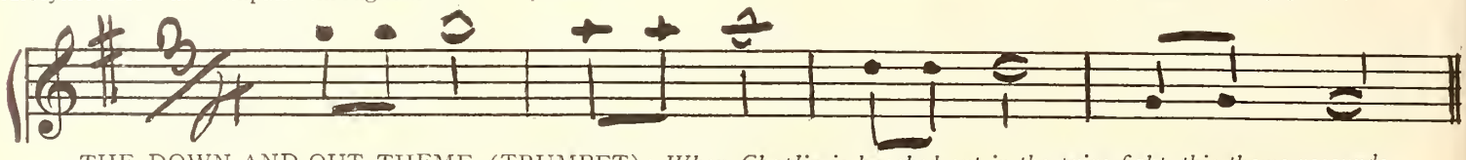
The inter-relation of sound and picture, in other words the art of the sound picture, is obviously still in the early phases of evolutionary development. There are those who hold that eventually we shall achieve a new art form differing quite from anything that has yet been seen or heard either on stage or screen. It is from such fancy free experimentalists as Mr. Charles Chaplin that we can expect entirely untrammelled adventuring and in "City Lights" Mr. O'Sullivan finds a real transcription of Chaplin in the sound component of the picture. It is very likely a picture to which the students of the future will turn in reconstructing the founding and derivations of sound technique.

THE EDITOR

Like his mimetic art which has many facets, his tonal expression has many mediums. In his talent for choosing particular voicing instruments for individual moods and situations, he reveals his affinity to the creative minds in the realm of interpretative music. As the timid soul—the "Patsy" whom everyone picks on—Chaplin speaks through the voice of the melancholy clarinet. In sentimental moods the throbbing tones of the violin gush out his tender passion. In merry moments the piccolo skips along with him allegretto giocoso. When stepping out with his soused patron who recognizes Chaplin only when he has a "bun on" and ignores him in his sober moments, the bassoon and saxophone, the burlesque instruments of the orchestra, literally go on a "toot" with the comedian and his rowdy millionaire companion.

The musical gags are synchronized with a deft touch. When Chaplin inhales spaghetti, a tone on a whistle slides right along with the inhalation. When Charlie swallows a whistle at the party and hiccoughs a la staccato, the baritone who is singing "I Hear You Calling Me" thinks the comedian is giving him the "razzberry." Shuffling rapidly down the steps to save the inebriate from plunging into a watery grave, a glissando on the harp accompanies his skidding feet. In the prize fight scene when the big bruiser hits him on the proboscis, there is heard the unmistakable imitation of birds twittering; and when Chaplin is knocked out and carried limp to his dressing room, there resounds in highly-pitched and jeering trumpet tones the fateful Jinx Theme or Down-and-Out Motif.

This ominous theme occurs also later when Chaplin is arrested and thrown into jail for "borrowing" money from his soused millionaire acquaintance to help the blind girl and restore her sight.



The discriminating application of musical voicing in dialogue scenes, as well as the tonal interpretation of exclamations and curt commands, is apparent. "Scram!" shouts the butler of his drunken pal; "You're fired!" yelps the boss of the street cleaning department; "I will live!" exclaims the inebriated millionaire; and in each instance the music voices the spoken words with conviction.

And yet, with all this musical "gagging" which achieves its end through its meticulous attention to detail, the predominating impression that remains after reviewing the picture is one of pity and irony; the pity that is evoked by the chronically frustrated —the human worm; the irony that runs as a contrapuntal theme through all Chaplin's

VIOLIN VOICE FOR SENTIMENT
In sentimental moods, the throbbing tones of the violin gushes out his tender passion.

THE DOWN-AND-OUT THEME (TRUMPET): When Chaplin is knocked out in the prize fight, this theme resounds in highly-pitched and jeering trumpet tones. When he is "pinched" and thrown into the "hoosegow," the same Jinx Motif gives him the raucous "razzberry."

Dialogue Must Meet the Action, Says Fairbanks

London—Dialogue will have to be handled so that it does not retard action before talking pictures will be made that move thinking audiences, Douglas Fairbanks told newspaper men here on his arrival to await the coming of his wife, Mary Pickford.

"Dialogue retards tempo," he said. "This is the tragic phase of the talkies." He pointed to the Zeppelin scenes in "Hell's Angels" and certain war shots in "All Quiet on the Western Front" as the most impressive manifestations of the audible screen art. He added that while Sergei Eisenstein, the Russian director of whom he has expressed great admiration, is right in his theories, his ideas are destructive.

Mary Pickford sailed May 12 from New York for Plymouth, where she will be met by her husband, Douglas Fairbanks, revealing before departing on the Bremen that she may appear on the London stage before returning. Prior to any stage engagement, however, she plans to visit several European countries with Fairbanks. The stage appearance would be for only six or eight weeks, she said, and would not interfere with her next picture.

Paramount May Release Its English Productions Here

Paramount pictures now in production at the British and Dominion studios at Elstree, England, will probably be part of the company's release schedule for 1931-32 in this country.

The first, "These Charming People," is already finished, and "Two for Divorce" is set for production this month, though cast and director have not been selected. "These Charming People" is about to be released in Canada and Australia.

Public to See Sales Trailer

The public will be given an opportunity to see the trailer Paramount made for its sales conventions, during the 25th anniversary jubilee week. Originally the trailer cost $60,000, but the one to be shown publicly will be cut down to about three reels and all sales talk eliminated.

62,365 Theatres Throughout World; Erpi Claims 40% of 19,984 Wired

At least thrice yearly there appear estimates of motion picture theatres operating throughout the world. The latest figure, emanating from London trade circles, places the total at 62,365, of which 22,731 are reported in the United States and over 5,000 in the British Isles.

Sound installations at picture houses, states the survey, represent a total of 19,984 for the world, of which 12,500 are in America, 5,401 in all of Europe and 905 in the Far East.

Western Electric, it is said, claims approximately 8,000 Erpi installations, representing about 40% of the world's wired theatres.

Lightman is president, will be handled from the Memphis offices of the circuit, following transfer of the accounting department from Camden, Ark., to be joined with the booking department, which has been conducted separately here under Lightman's direction. Jones Returns to U.S. from Europe

Paul Fortier Jones, the mysterious "Colonel Lawrence" of the newsreel world, arrived this week from a three-and-a-half-year sojourn in Europe, centering in Paris, where he represented Pathe News and various foreign aspects of Pathe Exchange, Inc. With the coming of the Courtland Smith administration of Pathe News, Jones' connection with the enterprise terminated.

Jones will spend a month in New York on motion picture and related matters, after which he will depart on a new mission in foreign fields.

It will be recalled in the newsreel field that a number of unusual performances were achieved in the European field by Pathe News, markedly in the earlier days of sound news reporting, due to the attentions of Jones. Presumably he alone knows precisely how various pictures got across the sea. He operated in various confidential capacities for departments of the government through the world war and is the author of a number of books including "With Serbia Into Exile."

Wanger Resumes Post in Charge Of Production

Walter Wanger is understood to have resumed his former position as general manager of Paramount production, with supervision over both East and West Coast plants. The change returns him to the home office, from his post at the Long Island studio.

James R. Cowan will take over direct management of the Eastern plant, under the supervision of Wanger, who will continue to keep an eye on activities there. Wanger's return to his former post is understood to meet with the approval of B. P. Schulberg, and is a reversal of the situation within the company. Schulberg was supposed to have taken charge of both units last fall, but the arrangement failed to materialize.

The recent trip of Adolph Zukor to the Coast is reported to have been concerned with a discussion of the plan with Schulberg.

Expect Advent in Canada Soon of Sponsored Films

Montreal—A start has been made with sponsored films on a local basis in Montreal with the organization of an enterprise called the Motion Picture Advertising Company, whose notice of incorporation does not give a list of its proprietors or directors. Thus far, however, commercial films, in their newest form, have not yet actually made their appearance on the screen in Canada, with the possible exception that the two transcontinental railway systems in the Dominion have long supplied Canadian theatres with scenics which contain that "travel urge."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

HERE'S how the Musicians' Union in Chicago treats "bad boys" in that town, according to the association's official publication:

"Occasionally some member gets the idea in his head that he is of more importance than the local. Whenever that happens, the member, no matter who he may be, is immediately subjected to deflation by the powers that be, and reduced to his natural size.

"A case in point was that of Al Evans, erstwhile master of ceremonies with the Balaban and Katz theatres. Evans was so inflated with his own importance that he became abusive to the men working under him; swore at them while in the performance of their duties; threatened them with personal violence, and even questioned the power of the local to interfere with or discipline him.

"After due investigation of his case President Petrillo took Evans off the job and kept him off for three weeks. The effect was salutary. Evans appeared before the Board of Directors, admitted his shortcomings, asked to be forgiven, and begged to be reinstated in his position. This, the Board agreed to do. But by this time Balaban and Katz had reached the conclusion that Evans was not the type of man they wanted in their employ, and they refused to reinstate him. As a result, therefore, of Evans' high handed methods, he lost out altogether. Other leaders are advised to profit by Mr. Evans' experience—and learn, before it is too late, that—

"NO MEMBER IS BIGGER THAN HIS UNION

"Whenever a member begins to think he is, and acts in accordance with that mistaken idea, his case will be handled in the same expeditious manner as this one.

MOST of the stories indicting film officials are carried to civilization by writers and actors and, while I haven't any desire to set myself up as the white champion of picture corporations, I can't say that writers and actors impress me as being impartial critics!"

This from Pare Lorentz, drama defender on Hearst's N. Y. Journal, who, continuing, points out that he has "no doubt that it is ridiculous and wasteful for a corporation to employ a well known author and then leave him to vegetate in a great office day after day without even knowing he is on the payroll. But it seems to me the boys complain not so much at the bad management of the companies as they do at the fact that they are not recognized.

"I can see how it would hurt. After all, if a writer has been used to having editors of women's magazines squiring him, from tea party to party and if he has inured himself to the strain of having starry-eyed little girls rushing at him and pleading with him to relax at their Long Island homes: if this same successful man has been accustomed to autographing books on Macy's basement to a shoppers' chorus of praises, it must be irksome and ridiculous to find himself sitting in an office in Hollywood with nothing to do except draw a pay check.

"A few honest men have gone insane in Hollywood simply because executives have destroyed good work. That's enough to gripe anyone, but I can't see why movie executives should take the rap for 'box-office' methods. If a writer signed a contract with a steel company or an automobile company or any other great corporation I see no reason why he would not find they hired him to turn out works of art. If he expects and gets a great salary, if he believes, as the boys do, that movie companies are commercial, why should he come home crying about the stupidity of Hollywood?"

Disregard Chain Tieup in Buying Product: Schenck

read even after he has been through a big pile of material. I know because I have tried to catch him up on minor points of complicated stories. And, of course, the selection of material is one of the very most important steps in production.

40% of Hits from M-G-M

"Some of our bright and analytical young men here have put figures before me, indicating that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, in the last year, has had the honor and the good fortune to make forty per cent of the industry's total output of pictures which can fairly be classed as 'hits.' With due allowance for enthusiasm in these figures, we have occasion to feel encouraged to continue the process and our policy of production.

"One of the elements of this policy is to get a competent man to do something and then let him do it. Any observer of this industry, who reflects on its operations for any period, say the last five years, will perhaps note that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production organization has been outstandingly free from sweeping changes. In fact there have been, in the more important capacities, almost no changes of personnel. We think this is healthy. Sweeping changes and rapid turnover in staffs, no matter in what capacities, are expensive in several directions. Changes themselves presume that mistakes have been made and that endeavors are being made to correct them, but they also mean that large investments in personnel have to be written off with every series of departures. It is admitted in the industry generally that labor turnover is expensive. Turnovers in the delicate mechanisms, brains, artistry, and the peculiar types of specialized intelligence involved in motion picture making, is tremendously more expensive. Much firing always means bad hiring somewhere."

Program Should Be Elastic

Discussing production programs, Mr. Schenck placed emphasis on the importance of a schedule sufficiently elastic to keep the output closely attuned to contemporary interest, joining decidedly in the spirit of a recent editorial in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, setting up the contention that most program changes known in the trade as "substitutions" were genuine endeavors to more closely attune it to the market and box office trend in the period of release.

"It would really be better," said Mr. Schenck, "if trade conditions were such that we did not have to try to announce the whole season's product for the selling season. Of course, it isn't practical now, but the industry, the box-office, and the public would certainly be quite as well off if we could be commercially at liberty to announce the output just in terms of abstract numbers, say from one to fifty, the titles, players, and stories to be announced when the product is ready."

Mr. Schenck took occasion to point to a factor of such elasticity in the current Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product announcement, embodied in the item "The Marquee 5," which is to be "a group of specially selected productions, among them stories that link up to the moment."

Cites "Caught Short"

"Last season's 'Caught Short' is an example of the way that the motion picture can swiftly key itself to the interest and mood of the public at the moment," Mr. Schenck observed. "We had a market condition, tremendously widespread in its excitement and interest, and Eddie Cantor had hit the public attention at the moment with his little book entitled 'Caught Short.' This represented a momentary, fleeting opportunity of the kind that is so valuable to the theatre to be able to capitalize."

While agreeing in the main that the motion picture must be considered largely an art and an industry unto itself, dependent on the development of its own material and personalities, Mr. Schenck took occasion to remark that there is to the motion picture a special value in the occasional presentation of great artists who have achieved high success in other media, citing as an example, the bringing of Lawrence Tibbett's romantic voice to the screen. One gains the impression that Mr. Tibbett singing "Lover Come Back to Me" is perhaps to Mr. Schenck the greatest song he ever heard. As he thoughtfully reached into Howard Dietz's case for a Lucky, he observed "that song alone would have been worth all it cost"—and while the interviewer was estimating the cost of the production involved—Mr. Schenck added, "even if I had paid $2 for a seat."

Anyway, Mr. Schenck is an ardent opera patron and appears to take his music to heart.

Public Not Tired of Music

"They talk about the public being tired of this and that, including musical shows," remarked Mr. Schenck, "but if the human race is tired of music, it would be the first time since civilization began, and I am not inclined to think that anything so radical has happened all at once. The public may be tired of some kinds of musical productions, but the public is not, and never will be, tired of music."

He also cited as a significant acquisition from without the field of the motion picture, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine for one production in the current schedule, as an achievement well calculated to confer status not only upon the output of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but upon the motion picture as an institution.

"It is quite desirable," Mr. Schenck asserted, "that each year, each of the important makers of motion pictures should endeavor to present a number of productions of a special quality calculated to build up and maintain the standing of the screen. It is well for the motion picture to have associated with it, from time to time, the great names of other great arts, and this too is one way of being effectively contemporary. The screen, as a capable and comprehensive medium, has in fact an obligation to convey what it can of attainments of great artists to a public so widely and generally dependent on the screen."

Schenck on Ad Films

The discussion of obligation to the public brought up the much bruited subject of advertising presented on the theatrical screen. Mr. Schenck's attitude can be about as neatly summed up as Calvin Coolidge once summarized a Washington sermon to Mrs. Coolidge at the White House.

The President, it seems, had gone to the morning Sabbath services alone, and returning was asked by Mrs. Coolidge what the sermon had been about.

"Sin," said Mr. Coolidge.

"What did he say about it?" asked Mrs. Coolidge.

"He's agin it," replied Mr. Coolidge.

Nicholas Schenck is agin advertising on the theatre screen. Also, he may later engage in it. He estimates thus far, in the current period, the refusal of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Loew's, Inc., to engage in the making and presentation of advertising pictures, has meant a refusal of about $500,000 in allegedly net revenue.

"I would not call it a loss of half a million dollars," Mr. Schenck calculated, "because getting that $500,000 I suspect might easily have cost us indirectly a great deal more."

Loew Theatres Will Continue Ban on Ad Reels

Loew Houses Refuse Ad Reels

"Some of our own theatre managers have expressed their curiosity as to why Loew Theatres have not accepted screen advertising, as other theatres have done, and why we are foregoing the large revenue held out to us by advertisers.

"Loew's Theatres were probably among the first to be offered huge sums to run subsidized motion pictures. However, our decision was and still is to refuse to use our screens for advertising. At present we see no reason to change our attitude.

"We are definitely opposed to the commercializing of the screen. Screen advertising is unfair to our audiences. An advertisement on the screen forces itself upon the spectator. He cannot escape it . . . yet he has paid his admittance price for entertainment alone. Screen advertising is far different from newspaper or magazine advertising. One is not forced to read that advertising. It is true that some screen advertising is cleverly done, and in spite of its commercial angle it is entertaining. However, I should not like to see many of such subsidized pictures and the temptation is to make the advertising phase more and more obtrusive and hence annoying to the audience.

To Continue Fight

"We have been very active in trying to persuade other producers and theatre operators to take a stand against screen advertising similar to ours. We are continuing these efforts to free the screen from anything but entertainment. We are hopeful that the entire industry will take a stand against screen advertising and not attempt to force our theatres into that field."

Mr. Schenck is decidedly aggressive in his opposition to advertising on the theatre screen, and aggressive to the point that he has urged opposition to it from important newspaper publishers. Among those with whom Mr. Schenck has discussed this subject is Adolph Ochs of the New York

Illinois Measure Asks 2 In Booth

Chicago—Exhibitors here are disturbed the discovery of a bill at Springfield thorizing two projectionists in every the- re in the state. The current arrangement tween exhibitors and the union holds un- January 1, when some relief from a bur- nsome situation would at least become a ssibility for theatre owners.

Deep secrecy has shrouded the measure, troduced by a Peoria representative, and hich, if passed, would become effective st prior to the lapse of the present agree- ent. Exhibitor circles and the Film Board Trade had no knowledge of the measure, r was any possible explanation of its igin forthcoming. It was omitted from e proposed legislation reports of the Asso- ation of Commerce. The measure was cidentally discovered by Jack Miller, esident of the Chicago Exhibitors' Asso- ation.

Real Evidence!

Sacramento, Cal.—Proof of the pudding . . . etc. But in this case it wasn't eaten, it was inhaled. During the trial of the projectionists charged with conspiring to dynamite the Mission last October, the prosecution brought in some stench bomb fluid as sabotage evidence. It spilled and the whole court adjourned in a hurry. On resumption, the same prosecution promised dynamite sticks as the morrow's attraction, but the defense hastily explained that it would not be necessary.

make it go forth and sell what it made was wrong. You cannot make actors out of salesmen nor executives out of actors. Nor can you make an industrial city, or a Harvard business school, or a church conference, or a banker's convention out of an actors' boarding house, even if the latter does have the appearance of a great de luxe hotel.

There's a moral, however, to this story; the situation is too big not to have one. If we admit that it is advisable and necessary to maintain a continent's width between the two branches of an industry there is but one way to bridge the gap, and that is with the use of ordinary good sense, forbearance and sincerity, and as frequent visits or active interchange of departmental heads as is practical.

The Black Camel

(Fox)

Delightful Mystery Yarn

Following more closely along the lines of the novel by Earl Derr Biggers than is usually the case in the motion picture version of a widely-read story, "The Black Camel" brings much of the actual glamour and beauty of the Hawaiian Islands to the screen. It is primarily a mystery story enlivened by the humor of the proverb-loving Charlie Chan and lightened by the romance which develops between the slain girl's secretary and the enthusiastic agent of the travel bureau.

Many are entangled in the web of suspicion when Shelah Fane, famous film star, is found murdered in the pavilion of her Honolulu home the night of her arrival upon the Islands. There are the guests whom she has summoned to dine, among them a former Hollywood friend and her millionaire husband. There is the suitor who awaits her decision upon his proposal, there is the former husband whose presence in Honolulu is not known by her friends until after Shelah's murder and last but not least, there is Tarnaverro the Great.

Charlie Chan, that famous Chinese detective of the ready smile and fertile brain, is called in on the case, and even the inimitable Chan is puzzled.

Tarnaverro, idol of the superstitious women of Hollywood, has been summoned by Shelah as she debates the propriety of a second marriage. During their interview the name of Denny Mayo, the mystery of whose slaying in Hollywood has never been solved, is mentioned as the cause of Shelah's hesitation and the star promises to reveal to Tarnaverro that night the name of Mayo's killer.

But when Shelah's body is found, Tarnaverro has an alibi in the persons of a couple who have known him during a sojourn in Australia. It is while investigating this alibi that Chan discovers the psychic's real name is Mayo and that he is a brother of the slain man. The matter is further complicated when Shelah's former husband, who has been seen leaving the pavilion shortly before the star's body was found, confesses to a murder he did not commit.

The shrewd Chan, however, gathers the group together once again around the table where all had been seated upon the night of the tragedy, and by means of scratches upon the floor caused by a friction of the pin which held the slain girl's corsage, embedded in the shoe of the killer, discovers the guilty person. All signs point to Tarnaverro until it is discovered that the servants, also, had occupied those chairs and that the slayer was Shelah's maid, widow of Denny Mayo, revenging herself upon her husband's killer.

Warner Oland has never given a better performance than that of Charlie Chan in this production, but he shares honors with Bella Lugosi, whose portrayal of Tarnaverro is masterly. Accents fall thick and fast throughout the film, for Victor Varconi is cast as the husband.

Dorothy Revier is convincing in the role of Shelah Fane, although hers is but a brief appearance. Sally Eilers, also, is pleasing as the devoted secretary who finds romance during the unhappy hours following the star's death.

Hamilton MacFadden deserves great credit for the direction. There are some clever touches of comedy introduced to lighten the drama, particularly the scene in Chan's home when his many children demand in typical American slang, that their idol's slayer be found.

On the whole, an unusually good offering.

Light comedy or cartoon shorts will go well with this feature.

Produced and distributed by Fox. From the novel by Earl Derr Biggers. Adaptation by Hugh Stange. Screen play and dialogue by Barry Connors and Phillip Klein. Directed by Hamilton MacFadden. Photography by Dan Clark. Sound by W. W. Lindsay, Jr.

"Daddy Long Legs"

Hollywood—Fox has come through with one which is certain to be numbered among the best pictures of the year. "Daddy Long Legs" looks to have unlimited appeal, being a thoroughly modern treatment of a sure-fire story. It has a bounteous mixture of laughs, thrills, tears, and beauty. With the names of Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter placed up front, it is difficult to see how this one can miss. It is splendid entertainment for man, woman or child, and director Al Santell, adaptor Sonya Levien, dialogue writer S. N. Behrman and entire Fox organization deserve great credit. In addition to the leads, excellent performances are given by such favorites as Una Merkel, Claude Gillingwater and others. Young Kendall Maccomas as Freddie Perkins, the orphan, looks like a real juvenile find. —MEEHAN.

Full length review of "Daddy Long Legs" will appear in the next issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Smart Money

(Warner Bros.)

Robinson Splendid

Edward G. Robinson once more demonstrates his genius at characterization, his perfect naturalness and his cleverness in balancing the comedy and dramatic values of a performance, in "Smart Money." He has been ably assisted by a very competent cast, smooth direction b Alfred E. Green and a production backgrour that lacks nothing to make it convincing "Smart Money" portends to be nothing but jus good entertainment, and it certainly appear to achieve this worthy end.

Robinson plays the part of a barber sho owner in a small town (it might be O. C McIntyre's famous Gallipolis, Ohio). Betwee shaves he devotes himself to card games, spe cializing on poker. What he does to the loca boys is plenty; but he is so amiable about that they seem to enjoy being taken for th town payroll. They feel, however, that suc talent deserves more fertile fields. So they a pool their resources and send Eddie to the bi town to clean up on the big-time gambler Eddie meets with stacked decks and marke cards and other tricks of sharpers which wer unknown to the friendly, honest games of hi home town. He, in turn, is taken for his roll Bravely he goes back and faces the music. Bu the boys have not lost confidence. Eddie wil know better next time. Another pool is formed and Eddie returns not only to regain what wa lost, but to pay a few scores.

Eddie makes good this time with a vengeance He soon becomes the gambling king of the bi city, owner of elaborate night clubs and pal aces of chance. But he retains his small town simplicity and frankness. He has no ambition to be a gangster. He seems quite satisfied t outsmart the smart ones, and to provide en tertainment for those who like to indulge in little games of chance. But the inevitable vic crusaders get on his trail. The district attor ney is set to put him out of business. An elec tion campaign is on, and the D. A. must mak a showing. He finds the amiable Eddie pretty hard to land in the net of the law. He trie stool pigeons, but Eddie has an uncanny faculty of spotting them before they get started.

But Eddie has fallen in love, and the gir proves to be his downfall. She is tricked int spilling the chips, and Eddie's career as a gam bler is over. He finds that shaving beards after all, is a better game than shaving cards

It is all good fun, and certainly should pro vide interesting entertainment for all who have played cards "for keeps," whether it has been penny-ante or for tremendous stakes. Supporting Robinson is an unusually good group o popular players, including pretty Evalyn Knapp James Cagney, Ralf Harolde, Noel Francis Margaret Livingston, Maurice Black, William House, Paul Porcasi, Gladys Lloyd and Polly Walters.

Diversified shorts on the bill will fill nicely here.

Tilly of Bloomsbury

(Sterling)

Comedy With Kick

[Reviewed in London by HERALD Representative]

This old stage play, toured throughout the kingdom time and time again, and staged by hundreds of amateur dramatic societies everywhere, is now converted into talker fare. Adaptation and direction have broadened its range of appeal, and refined its humor, though, as the title suggests, it is still a thing of local color.

Thematically, however, it is just cinderella and the prince. They meet, Tilly (of Bloomsbury) and young Richard Mainwaring, on the ice. Tilly looks better than she skates and with her prince there is no question of love in cold storage. In no time he takes her to his people; she is snubbed, and in a desperate effort to make the best of herself she paints a roseate picture of her own home. Later the Mainwaring family, unable to persuade their young blood to break the engagement, decide to pay a visit to Tilly's Bloomsbury "mansion," which, like most places in Bloomsbury, is really a cheap apartment house.

Tilly's people are caught in a jam: the brokers are in, the lodgers fall out, and every member of the Welwyn family, excluding pater, who is a swell brought down through drink, just manages to add to the trouble. Tilly is humiliated, and for the sake of her prince's happiness tries to tick him off. But he is not taking no for an answer; breaks with his snob family, and tricks his way into Tilly's house as a boarder, pays off the bailiff, and on the fade-out comes out with the line: "Here I am and here I stays until I gets what I come for."

There is no great story value here, but fine play is made of the contrasts. Settings and characterizations are used skillfully to exploit these. Chief comedy part is that of the bailiff, who, when the Mainwarings are expected at the Tilly home, is "bribed" to pose as the family butler. This is played by Sydney Howard, who makes the piece. Other good character work is contributed by Mabel Russell (late M. P.) as Tilly's mater, and Sebastian Smith as the Mainwaring father.

Tilly is played by Phyllis Konstam, considered a good bet on this side. She is not quite at home in the part, and her photographic possibilities are not overdeveloped. Result is that at times, when the story calls for a really sweet quality, one feels a trifle puzzled as to why young Mainwaring succumbed.

One good point is established by this picture. British producers can get snap into comedies. Running time is only 70 minutes and action is speedier than in any similar British offering in years. Picture is just one of those pleasant things; it is a moving picture, and it gets the laughs.

Produced and distributed by Sterling. Based on the play "Tilly of Bloomsbury." Directed by Jack Raymond.

Captain Thunder

(Warners)

Colorful, Entertaining

There is color, life and entertainment in this story of a swashbuckling Mexican bandit chief, who is Robin Hood personified, and made delightful through the work of Victor Varconi. Director Alan Crosland, wisely enough, refused to take the story and its characterizations too seriously, with a happy result.

In a realistic appearing and true Mexican locale, the estimable Captain Thunder plies his happy-go-lucky way, robbing here, helping there, in a manner all his own, and one which attracts the spectator. He possesses a way with the ladies, and a sense of honor of which he is very proud.

Fay Wray as his leading support does very nearly as excellent a piece of work as Varconi himself, with Charles Judels as a pompous commandante teaming well with them, and supplying much of the amusement with his puffed up manner in a delightful characterization.

The engaging bandit chieftain is kept considerably busy in his efforts to appear chivalrous. He compels the heroine to marry a wealthy swindler, kills him immediately following the ceremony so that she may inherit his money, then officiates in his own fine style as master of ceremonies at the marriage of the girl and hero Juan Sebastian, played rather without an overabundance of sparkle by Don Alvarado.

Settings are excellent, carrying out with fine effect the theme and characterizations of the story. On the other side of the picture, is the directorial mistake of forcing his characters to speak in an attempted Spanish accent, which not only is unintelligible and a failure as such, but does its part in detracting from the entertainment value of the film as a whole.

Light enough, but good entertainment, colorful and with splendid characterizations by the three leading players, "Captain Thunder" should please generally.

Dramatic shorts, cartoons and musicals will fill the balance of the program well.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Original story by Hal Bavitt and Pierre Couderc. Screen adaptation by Gordon Rigby. Dialogue by William K. Wells. Cameraman, James Van Trees. Directed by Alan Crosland. Release date April 26, 1931. Footage 5976. Running time 67 minutes.

Paramount May Sell Half Of Lineup Outside Warne

Philadelphia—At least half of the 1931-32 Paramount program is expected to play Keith's theatre, former ace Paramoun house here, in spite of the booking by the Warner group of Paramount product. A R. Boyd, head of the Moon Amusement operators of Keith's, states that the house will be kept open indefinitely, with installation of a cooling system for summer operation.

It is understood here that Paramount i reserving the right to book into Keith's an independent houses any of its product no contracted for Warners. Added to thi number, which may reach 45 of the 72 Par amount pictures, Keith's will probably play several United Artists productions not se into a Warner house. Two U. A. pictures "City Lights" and "The Front Page," have already been played by Keith's.

Twin City Orpheums Now Showing Different Films

Minneapolis—RKO Orpheums in this city and St. Paul are now showing different pictures, according to a new policy adopte with the closing of the President in St Paul, and the Seventh Street here, RKO second-run.

Formerly, both Orpheums ran the same screen bills, thus jointly getting the value o a single exploitation campaign in this territory. Apparently the idea now is to give each theatre a separate draw, business conditions probably making the field too small for two houses with the same appeal. As heretofore, however, the stage bill will open in Minneapolis, then go to St. Paul.

General Theatres Equipment has developed a new projector, geared to accommodate any width film from 35mm. to 70mm. which is looked upon as Harley L. Clarke's answer to the wide film problem, at present dormant. A gear shift makes the required change.

Fox, it is understood, is continuing research in color and wide film under supervision of Earle Sponble, in charge of research for Clarke enterprises.

Purely An Accident
(Vitaphone)
Entertaining

A bit different, in the prize fighter type of comedies. The champion, despite successive knockouts, has an inferiority complex. When a girl becomes attracted to him, she instills a feeling of superiority, which becomes so overbearing that it finally leads to his finish in the ring. The weakness of fighters obviously not fighting might have been overcome by better casting. Directed by Roy Mack, from a story by Sam Hellman.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Movie Memories—No. 4
(Paramount) (Sponsored by Chesterfield Cigarette)
Fine

There is real interest and a measure of reminiscent enjoyment in this series, and this number is no exception. Goes back to 1900, with shots of hansom cabs in an old fashioned traffic jam at 42nd street and Fifth avenue, a women's obstacle race in which the greatest obstacle were their skirts, a bridal couple at Niagara Falls, Theodore Roosevelt taking office and several scenes from "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse." Clever lines add much to the effectiveness of the short.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Strange As It Seems—No. 9
(Universal)
Good

If in the accompanying running fire of comment, they would cease attempting to be funny, this short would be rated even higher than "good." The seemingly unending stream of puns is terrible, which is particularly depressing since the subject matter of the issue is varied and highly interesting. The only purpose of the would-be humor is to almost spoil the short. Otherwise quite good.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Strange Case
(Vitaphone)
Only Fair

Here is a good comedy which falls short of its possibilities through lack of sufficient time devoted to it. Every guest at a dinner party wants the best part of the chicken, and the man who escapes with it, is hunted down and shot. Police are called, and they kill the rest of the guests in an effort to solve the crime. Then the lucky one comes to life and eats his chicken.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Stay Out
Slow

This is supposed to be a comedy, but it falls rather sadly short of that classification. Charlie Murray plays the lead in what develops into a bedroom complication, with little or nothing really original in it. Murray, locked out of his duplex apartment, enters his neighbor's rooms, and that is the excuse for what follows. One scene, in which Murray is in bed with his neighbor's wife, will probably prove objectionable to numerous patrons. Al Kelly directed.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Lodge Night
(Vitaphone)
Poor

The idea is very old, concerning the husband who goes to a night club for a good time with a friend and two girls. The wife breaks in with the usual result. Acting throughout the short is very weak. Roy Mack directed.—Running time, 7 minutes.

SHORTS

Parisian Gaieties
(Universal)
Only Fair

A Slim Summerville, which falls away considerably from the high comedy standard set by the previous numbers. Lines repeat themselves and it lacks the punch most others have had consistently. Eddie Gribbon continues as the top-sergeant, and Pauline Garon is the girl in the case, but she is decidedly subordinated and appears in only a few scenes. Paris is the locale, but humor is lacking conspicuously. Direction by Steve Roberts.—Running time, 17 minutes.

The Inventor
Just Fair

Billy Wayne plays the inventor, and Thelma White the wife who has little sympathy with his ambitions, believing he should go to work for a living. A safety device for cars lands him on top of a telegraph pole, and he almost sells an "unbreakable" windshield, after the prospect had hurled bricks at it, when suddenly a baseball drives right through it. A few laughs, but nothing startling. Alf Goulding directed.—Running time, 10 mmutes.

Night Class
(RKO Pathe)
Good Enough

Nat Carr is amusing enough in this comedy short with a gang angle. The idea is fine, but they slip a bit in putting it across. Nat Carr, tailor, is tipped to attend a night class if he would pick up a small $5,000. It develops that the "class" is a gang hangout, and Nat is picked to "bump off" the prize enemy. He does it, but entirely accidentally. Laughs are well spotted.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Country School
(Universal)
Not Much

Oswald, Universal's cartoon rabbit, borders very decidedly on the questionable in most of the animation of this number. There has been too much of a tendency recently in the animated cartoons toward just this sort of thing. It may be merely a substitution for lack of good and original comedy ideas, but if it is, it fails to get by. Situation in this one is decidedly not new, and the lines weak.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Cab Waiting
Just Fair

Jack Benny engages a taxi driver in conversation, and discovers he is an authority on language and correct speech. Benny meets a chorus girl and takes her home in the cab after the show. THE SHORT FEATURE

Roach Denies Use Of Paid Advertising

Denial that paid advertising had appeared in one of his shorts was made by Hal Roach, whose Our Gang, Charley Chase, Laurel-Hardy and Boy Friends comedies are released through M-G-M.

Suggestion had been made that scenes showing the use of a well-known insecticide and a popular soap came under the category of commercial advertising.

"I have never accepted one cent from any advertising company for any advertising that every appeared in a Hal Roach comedy," said Roach. "I can promise every exhibitor that we will never accept any money for advertising until the theatre has first been informed of that fact and is asked to run the picture knowing that it is paid advertising."

Talmadge and U.A. "Quit Each Other"

Norma Talmadge and United Artists have severed contractual relations. Samuel Goldwyn has released her from her obligations to make two more pictures for that company in an arrangement reported to have been made amicably following her own request that the release be granted.

The reason for the action is stated by Goldwyn to be Miss Talmadge's desire to select her own stories, which is contrary to a recently established policy. In a statement to the press, the star said:

"I do not intend to make a picture until I find the story I want to do. I have made no definite plans as yet, but I have had several offers from producers here and in Europe. I feel that in the future I should be permitted to choose my own stories and any new affiliation I make will depend on this privilege."

Wide Moves in Paramount; Fox on New York Market

selling was going on in the group as a whole.

RKO held generally within a one point range between 17 and 18, while Loew's climbed back from a low of 41¾ to above 43. The former is expected to earn about 65 cents a share for the first half of the current year, which compares with $1.44 for the full year 1930. Earnings of Loew's were estimated this week at $5 a share for the 40 weeks ending June 5. For the year ended August 3, 1930, the company earned $9.65 a share.

Warners had the lightest volume of dealings in some weeks and moved within a narrow and fractional range, but the convertible 6 per cent bonds were subject to considerable selling and dropped substantially.

The thin market in Columbia Pictures resulted in another drop to a new low in the voting trust certificates on the curb.

Higher Depreciation Basis Expected in Fox Report

the old Fox basis of figuring amortization charges of film to the first six months.

The new system makes the amount charged off each week entirely dependent on the earnings of the current earnings of each picture.

The Fox report prepared under the old 1929 method of accounting is expected to show earnings, before Federal taxes, of about $11,000,000 and per share earnings of about $4.35. The earnings, according to this estimate, are approximately $500,000 over 1929. No estimates on what the report prepared under the higher depreciation schedule will show have been made.

The election of new directors connected with the banking interests that handled the recent refunding operation is scheduled for the June 10 meeting.

Warner Clayton Act Suit Postponed

Department of Justice has agreed to a postponement of trial of the action against Warners charging purchase of First National to be a violation of the Clayton anti-trust act.

Warners' counsel stated their defense was not ready for trial in Federal Court, New York.

Loew Theatres Will Continue Ban on Ad Reels

Times who surprisingly enough, says Mr. Schenck "does not at all concur in opposition to this sort of competition with newspapers and the printed page."

"Mr. Ochs tells me," said Mr. Schenck, "that he does not believe that expenditures made by great advertisers to reach the screen will have any effect on reduction of their appropriation for newspaper advertising. We were talking about one particular company which is spending, let us say, twenty million dollars in a certain campaign. Mr. Ochs says that if this company decides to spend three or four million dollars with the motion picture theatre, that it will not be subtracted from the general appropriation, but merely added to it. I find that difficult to believe, because no matter how big a company may be, or how much money it may have to spend, there is, after all, a limit somewhere. At this time we certainly will not put advertising pictures on our screens, and I hope we shall never have to. Of course, 'never' is a long time, and I suppose that if everyone else does it, and makes it profitable, we shall have to do it. But I am far from convinced that it will be profitable and that advertising will long be regularly presented on theatre screens.

Europe Turned on Ad Films

"It is worth recording that we have already had some highly indicative experience in this direction. In Europe, there has long been advertising on the screen. It also long ago became a bore to the spectator and a menace to the theatres. Some years ago we acquired the Gaumont Theatres in France, including fourteen houses in Paris. These houses were laden with advertising of just the sort that may yet come to the screens of America. We swept the advertising off the screens, and began operating the theatres in behalf of the patrons and after a healthy period of profitable operation, the owners found the business so desirable that they bought back the lease from us.

"A great deal has been said in the press of late about how successful advertising pictures can be made by their cleverness and entertainment value. Some clever advertising pictures have been made and presented recently. That proves nothing for the average performance over a term of years. In Europe, the advertising started out to be clever, too, but as I cited above, it became mediocre and a bore. It is likely to be so of advertising pictures here. It is not possible to expect for a whole field of expression of any sort that its attainment will be above the human average—the human average is by necessity and the nature of being average, mediocre and commonplace—and that isn't entertainment. The exhibitors in the intelligent conduct of their theatres will throw out mediocre and commonplace pictures for which he is paying, but the temptation will always be very great to run the advertising picture for which he is paid, even if it is not up to an amusement standard."

Canadian Probe Up for Discussion

Ottawa—It has been intimated here that the Peter White film probe report will be tabled in the House of Commons next Tuesday for immediate discussion. The recommendations are now being kept securely under lock and key.

There are rumblings that recent action of Paramount in cutting dividend rate will be before the House during the discussion. The cut means that Canadian shareholders are now receiving the exact equivalent of what Canadian Famous Players paid in dividends prior to the now historic stock exchange one year ago; that is, $2 per share per annum, the Canadian stock having been exchanged on a basis of five to four of Paramount Publix.

Famous Players, apparently, has been anxious to assist Prime Minister Bennett in putting over the present government loan by donating the use of its theatres' screens for a personal message by Bennett who appeared before the camera for the purpose.

Incidentally, Bennett has declined to take any action in the deadlock between the minister of labor and the minister of national revenue over the barrier against sound trucks from the United States, unless full duty is paid on entry.

The last of the sound trucks which were operating in Canada under special customs permits, has now been withdrawn, and valuable Canadian shots in the news weeklies are already beginning to be conspicuous by their absence.

"Chaplin Talks with Own Music," Declares O'Sullivan

characterizations. It is the manner in which this pathetic-ironic motif is brought into high relief through the medium of the contrasting musical material, that adds distinction to the scoring. If it be but a step from the sublime to the ridiculous, it is assuredly but a half-step from pathos to bathos. It is in the sentimental and plaintive moments that the music evolved by Chaplin fulfills its function. "Beautiful Wonderful Eyes," the melody and words of which are credited to Chaplin (the music only accompanies the film); "Tomorrow the Sun Will Shine," "Happy Romance," "Promenade," "Orientale" and a one-step are said to be the comedian's contribution. In themselves they are melodious; in their application they fit into the moods and situations and linger with appealing lyric limning of pictorial material.

Perhaps Mr. Chaplin has some respect for the work and the opinions of "The Sublime Somnambulist" and the "Music Master of Bonn." These two immortals were never exposed to the wonders of the sound screen —not even to the silent movies—but it is intriguing to imagine what they might have done for the cause had they been so exposed.

There will be 13 two-reel features entitled "The Shadow" series, from the Detective Story Magazine.

"Pop" Warner, Vincent Richards, Babe Ruth, Charlie Paddock, Dr. Meanwell, and the Notre Dame football team will appear in the 26 one-reelers of the All-America Sports series, for which stars in other fields of sport will also be signed.

John Hix's "Strange As it Seems" oddity series in sound, dialogue and color, will continue with 13 one-reels.

Oswald, "Lucky Rabbit" cartoon, also continues with 26 one-reelers in the series.

Four all-talking serials will be produced, "Danger Island," starring Kenneth Harlan; "Battling with Buffalo Bill," starring Tim McCoy; "Heroes of the Law" and "The Airmail Mystery."

The 104 issues of the Universal Newspaper Talking Newsreel, with Graham McNamee, completes the short feature line-up.

Hence Gangster Films

Gangsters are a significant as well as lively phenomenon of current American life—therefore the industry produces gangster films. Such was Carl Laemmle's retort to an editorial appearing in the Paul Block group of newspapers, entitled "Stop Gangster Films." In a letter to Block, the Universal chief declared:

"Why not issue an order to your editors to stop printing gangster news? If you answer that the activities of gangsters are real live news, I shall agree with you, but at the same time I call your attention to the fact that gangsters are an important part of contemporary affairs, and as such they are bound to figure on the screen and on the stage as well as in newspapers.

"All three of these mediums reflect the life of today, and just as the stage and newspaper since their inception have mirrored contemporary life in all its phases, so will the screen do."

Laemmle Honors Rockne

Carl Laemmle, Universal president, and his party stopped off at South Bend, Ind., on the way to the Midwest sales meeting in Chicago, to honor the memory of the late Knute Rockne, to whom the "U" picture, "The Spirit of Notre Dame," is dedicated.

Director Albert Kelly is filming the short football subjects which Rockne wrote before his death. Part of the proceeds of the feature film, shortly to go into production, will be turned over to the family of the late coach.

New Radio Films in Color

Two Radio pictures, "Bird of Paradise" and "Condoning Wives," will be produced by Technicolor process.

Paramount is about to produce "Rose of the Rancho," entirely in Technicolor, with Dolores Del Rio and Richard Arlen in leading roles.

De Mille To Visit Europe

Hollywood—Cecil B. De Mille, following completion of his M-G-M contract, will sail for Europe with Mrs. De Mille, June 30, for a vacation of indefinite length.

Jean Harlow in New York

Jean Harlow is in New York for three weeks, after which she will return to the Coast to play in "Queer People" and "The Greeks Had a Word for It," with Ina Claire and Carole Lombard.

M P T O Unit Alarmed Over Protection Tilt wire on percentage to the still silent theatres, it was declared that the move would add several million dollars to the film rentals. And these houses were all of the very smallest class; too poor to buy wire.

"The Logic"

"If these can add several million dollars to the rentals, is it logical to contend that four or five times that number of more important independent theatres are a negligible asset?

"It is very true that it costs more to sell to 10 independently owned theatres than to one chain of 10 houses of similar size, but these sales, in a way, represent practically velvet, apart from the cost of selling.

"Put these houses out of business through excessive protection to the chains and the profit is lost. Cripple them by forcing them to wait too long for product and their ability to pay rental is reduced because the earning capacity is reduced, and this reduction appears, finally on the balance sheets of the production companies. It may be that the difference will change profits into losses, and there will not be a sufficient additional return from the producer's circuit to offset this loss. Even where a higher rental can be charged in return for extended protection, this increase will not cover the loss sustained by the reductions in the subsequent run prices.

"Pettijohn Understands"

"Apparently the only person on the producer side who has the vision to perceive this danger is C. C. Pettijohn. He knows from practical experience and observation that excessive production is hurtful to the best interests of the producers, and he is seeking to preserve limited protection. But so long as it is easier to swap bookings over the telephone or at lunch, the sales managers will continue to cater almost exclusively to the chains.

"And in its last analysis protection is merely the device of a lazy or incompetent manager, who cannot or does not try to sell the product intensively while he has it. He finds the three or four months' protection an easier way than getting out good newspaper advertising and conducting his house in such a fashion that more people will buy his first-runs."

Gulfport, Miss.—Organization of the Mississippi division of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and M. P. Machine Operators was completed here at a meeting attended by representatives of local units of the organization from principal cities and towns of the state. Decision to hold an annual meeting in July resulted in setting the date for July 19 and 20, at Gulfport.

A Noble Dome

Hollywood—What next! First it was flies buzzing in the "mike" that ruined talkies. Then it was bees! Then humming lights! Then automobiles and airplanes! And now—well, a scene in Robert Woolsey's "Everything's Rosie," was delayed for some time because a glare from one of the overhead lights reflected in the camera.

The performers were chased from the set while the trouble was sought frantically. Finally found, the hitch proved to be a reflection from the bald head of a player! It was smeared with putty to dim its brilliant reflection.

of selling a group of half a dozen to a dozen on moderate percentage, renters conceal the actual earnings of their "plum" pictures.

Long ago we were told that just as soon as the talker novelty had worn off and they didn't hold up on their own any longer, someone in America would show us a new idea.

That idea seems due.

What it is going to be no one seems to know. There is little we can hope for from color. The wide screen has so far refused to materialize and does not seem promising. Lavish stage shows are back again, notably in the big West End places where there is a marked tendency to kill the whole thing by competition.

Unless something strikingly new can be started somewhere, Hollywood will have to reckon on much less income from the British market for the next year or so. Notably so if Sunday cinemas are not allowed with full right to make profits on that day, for loss of Sunday earnings cannot be made up during the week.

British producers are fully prepared to get less money on current offerings, and they are, in nearly every studio, a good deal more conservative than they should be, with the result that it is likely that there will be a shortage of the right kind of quota offerings for the next quota year, although in a way this will help them to solve their problem because under the artificial stimulus of the law, the limitation of output cannot fail to react on values somewhere. The American output is not likely to be so affected, because although Hollywood is not now turning out as many films, the supply is more than adequate to meet the demands—numerically—of this market.

Wally Wales Visits Author

Hollywood—Wally Wales, Big 4 star, has left for Del Mar, where he will be the guest of Walt Coburn, writer of western fiction and author of the novel "Mavericks," published last season. Wales just completed "Riders of the Cactus," and after a brief holiday will return to the studio for another Big 4 out-door film under direction of David Kirkland.

Trouble Ahead Unless Costs Are Reduced

They cannot even be found for the stage, let along for the pictures.

"Since I have been here I've heard a lot of talk about bad business. All theatres are complaining about smaller grosses and increased expenses. If American producers are not careful they will find themselves facing the same condition that we did four years ago. Then your production costs over here will have to come down."

Speaking of foreign versions, Thorpe said he did not believe they ever could be made successfully here.

"We in England would not attempt to make a picture for any of the Latin countries," he said. "We haven't the Latin mind, we don't understand the people nor what they want. We can make and have made successful German pictures. The Saxon mind in Germany is not so different from the English. They are a little heavier, that's all. Besides that, we are only overnight from Germany and we can send over there and pick artists to fit the roles in a picture, not try to make the roles fit the artists.

"But as for the Latin races—that's a different matter. I don't believe that English or American producers can make pictures for them, not even in the Latin countries. Paramount's experiment at Joinville was not a pronounced success, to put it mildly. Now Paramount has started in England. If it operates there under the British system, keeps costs down, there is no reason why it should not make money with pictures made there. But it can't pay American salaries and do it."

Thorpe expects to remain in Hollywood two more weeks and then return to New York by way of Canada. He sails for London on the Majestic on May 29.

John Murie

John Murie, whose likeness you see herewith, is the young chap delighting Hammond, Indiana audiences via his organ solos at the Parthenon Theatre. A graduate of the University of Chicago with the class of 1924, Murie followed his academic career with a year of organ playing in Chicago theatres. Then came the beginning of an Indiana circuit ride as a result of a year in Fort Wayne, three years at the Indiana, Indiana Harbor and eventual settling at the big Warner Bros. Parthenon in Hammond, where, we wish to repeat, John is delighting that city's audiences.

Murie's talents are not limited to the organ. He is a concert pianist and orchestra conductor, having played concertos and symphonies with the larger orchestras in Chicago. He is, furthermore, an arranger of music, turning out several memorable arrangements for orchestra and organ, not the least of which are those for "RHAPSODY IN BLUE," "AN AMERICAN IN PARIS," "METROPOLIS," etc. All of which makes John Murie a young man with a record—of real achievement.

St. Paul Association Asks Paramount to Return Acts

Opportunity Overlooked By Organists

Orchestra's Immediate Introduction Aids Those at the Console in Popularizing Selections

By ED DAWSON

Is the organist doing his share in the introduction of new songs?

The question has been asked the writer time and time again each week, and to answer it he has gone to many sources. The answers have not been so flattering to the men and women at the console.

It is a situation, rather than a personality, that is to blame for the present condition. It is well for the organists to keep this in mind.

The public is fond of new music, but it is not always it will respond to these selections in the present vogue of community singing. Late songs, more than often, are unknown to audiences.

It is up to the organist to overcome this obstacle, and this is being done in many of the metropolitan houses.

Orchestral introduction of these pieces is advisable, and given this introduction the program planning of the organist becomes simplified.

To quote one who has observed the trend toward popular selections:

"By using new numbers musicians are enabled to provide the public with melodies which have not yet been broadcast to the point of inflicting boredom. The public, furthermore, is enabled to hear numbers which would not ordinarily reach its ears because of the former 'wait-until-it-gets-around' attitude maintained in the past. The new outlook, however, gives new songs a national hearing almost immediately upon their release. Those numbers having definite merit can then establish themselves in public favor."

STAGE SHOWS

Chicago Chicago

Week ending May 15

Al Kvale has dubbed his current stage show, "Imagine My Embarrassment." Just why, we have no idea; since it is a presentation of more merit than we, at least, are accustomed to, so we have no explanation to offer for Al's embarrassment. Unless, perhaps, he started out with some different, secret objective in mind than the one he achieved.

There are the customary four acts, dancing girl, and orchestra interludes, all presided over or assisted by Master Kvale. The latter and his orchestra are as good in this as in any presentation. The Bines Girls—an even dozen of them—if they vary at all from average, have at least had the wisdom to vary in the right direction. It is the variety of the four acts which makes "Imagine My Embarrassment" a good stage presentation which holds the interest and gives you that wonder-what-the-next-act-will-be feeling that good vaudeville bills once provided.

Joe and Dave O'Gorman are the clowns. Though much of their act—particularly their use of stooges—tastes like Olsen & Johnson, and the rest of it might have been borrowed from the burlesque stage (if there is really any difference), the brothers do draw laughs. If that is the test of a good comedy act, you have the answer.

Van Cello & Mary is billed as a European novelty act, but all the audience saw was a juggling routine which it obviously liked. Van Cello does his work lying on his back on a kitchen table. He has talented feet, and legs, which do amazing things with vari-colored barrels and win gasps and much applause from the audience. Mary, who rates a spotlight, carries the barrels offstage as Van finishes with them, and does her work very creditably.

"Babe" Kane is one of the prolific imitators of one Helen "Boop-a-Doop" Kane. Her voice is pitched accordingly and her songs and chatter are selected in the same order. Al Kvale comes to her assistance in presenting some "lovers' spats" scenes and when it is all over you feel that had she worked harder and depended less on her resemblances to her better known namesake her success would have been greater.

Sammy Kreboff was the tap dancer. Every stage presentation must have a tap dancer, you know; and because Sammy cut his time short, we liked him better than other tap dancers, and because he was the only tap dancer in "Imagine My Embarrassment" we liked Al Kvale's show a little better than the average.

San Antonio RKO-Majestic

Week ending April 29

Dave Smason and His RKOlians offer another of his well-liked overtures and now since this is the only pit orchestra in town, the band boys are a prime favorite to those who enjoy classical and jazz music.

Large and Morgner, give something different in "Two Feet of Daring," drawing a great big hand for their clever and thrilling work.

Vic Oliver, billed as "Europe's Gift to America," supported by "Halfpint" Margot Crangle, offers mirth and music, weaving a crazy-quilt of fun. Well received.

Joe Besser, eccentric comedian, is supported by Dorothy Ellsworth, Harry Lang, and Dorothy Wallace in a musical sketch of the Northwest, called, "Wildcat Dugan," showing what makes the wildcat wild. Nice applause.

Headlining was the genial Ross Wyse, Jr., and his father and mother in a little skit, "Bringing Up Parents," hilarious comedy. A hearty hand came at the finish.

"Bachelor Apartment," on the screen; business good.

New York Paramount

Week ending May 14

Paramount Publix is offering another of their big shows this week, first, the regular stage-show, headed by Charlie Davis and His Joy Gang and then Amos 'n' Andy who are making their New York stage debut. In a specially produced act, a scrim of a huge radio, through which Amos 'n' Andy reveal for the first time, their stage interpretations of their famous characters Kingfish, Lawyer Crawford, Lightnin', Madam Queen, Henry Van Porter and, of course, themselves. It sure must have been thrilling to this famous radio blackface team to hear the mighty responses the supposedly blasé New York audiences gave them.

The second half of the bill was represented in an entertaining stage-show called, "Paradise Isle," which opened to a beautiful south-sea setting in which Davis and his boys all played ukes, as the Haines Sisters nicely sang, "Moonlit Waters" and the Evans-Bines Girls backed them up with a good performance of special waltz steps. Haines Sisters then follow with their specialty of playing stringed instruments, which included ukeleles, Hawaiian guitars and banjos. The girls are accomplished musicians, good-looking and have loads of showmanship. King, King and King, rhythm tap dancers, prove to be the best of their kind. These three boys have really perfected the art of rhythm in their dancing and are offering some new steps which will prove difficult for their many imitators to copy. They earned their encore. Charlie Davis and His Joy Gang follow with their own specialties of entertaining music, songs and comedy. This week they are dressed in white flannels, white sweaters and leis around their necks. Their first number, the playing of "Crazy Tune" by 12 of the boys as 3 sang, received good applause. Frankie Darrow, one of the boys, croons "Lover Has Gone" and gets a great reception for it. Their last offering was a tap dance routine in which Davis and 7 of the boys perform. Of course, after having just seen the 3 Kings dance, one could easily see the difference, though the boys burlesqued all through the dance and Davis mentioned that they didn't profess to be dancers. Nevertheless, this band is just about the most entertaining one in New York at the present time.

The show closed with one of the most attractive finales ever presented at this house. It was called the "Sun God" dance, and was performed by Davis, and the boys as backgrounds as the Evans-Bines Girls did a frenzied ceremonial dance.

Featured picture this week is Leo Carrillo in "Hell Bound."

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending May 13

Real old-time vaudeville is brought to t Warfield in Fanchon & Marco's "Varietie Idea and some of the acts would be term headliners on any bill.

Rube Wolf and his "Joyous Jesters" dese the pit for the stage and start the show putting on "varieties" of their own. Rube su gests that this might be called "Smiles Weel and the boys sing "Smile, Darn You, Smile Then follows a lot of songs based on t smile theme, with some poems along the sar line, the offering being concluded with a renc tion of Gov. James Rolph's favorite son "Smiles," composed by Lee S. Roberts, of th city.

Rube introduces Grant & Wallace and the two dancers are joined by a girl who sings a another who plays the accordion. They a followed by Baker, Dove and Allen, who p on a sensational exhibition of Indian clu throwing. The air is filled with flying clul and some seemingly impossible stunts are pe formed. A lot of comedy is injected in t act which goes over in great shape. It's a t notcher.

Sully and Thomas, fun purveyors, give brand of entertainment along decidedly diffe ent lines and likewise stop the show. The have some novel gags in which trick costum have a part and about the time the audien thinks their act is over Sully breaks out in a dance that is a wonder. The pair then do dance they call the "St. Louis Rhythm" ar end with a radio broadcasting stunt that really laughable.

The Norman Thomas quintette proves a other headline aggregation and boasts a piani of exceptional ability, whose rendition "Listen to the Mocking Bird" brings a stor of applause. Likewise it has a sweet singe and a couple of rubber limbed dancers.

The show is full of snap, speed, novelty an hilarity and goes over with a bang. It is little longer than usual, by the watch, bu there are no draggy moments.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending April 29

"Melodies of Spring" is featured by the or chestra under the direction of Don Wilkins augmented by Iris Wilkins at the organ, as prelude to Fanchon & Marco's "Love Letters Idea. "Rustle of Spring," and "Then Yo Know that Spring Is Here," a novelty selec tion, are included in the offering.

George Ward and Jeanne Devereaux ope the idea with a clever song and dance act an introduce the chorus of sixteen, who, attire in white costumes with long staffs, offer a interesting dance interpretation to the tune o "Among My Souvenirs."

Featured in connection with the chorus is decidedly expert toe dancer, who performs i excellent style.

Nelson & Knight entertain with comic pat ter and wind up with some snappy stepping The feminine member of the troupe also obliges with the violin.

The next number of the chorus casts the members as mail carriers. The dance offering is augmented by George Ward, who tap dances in an engaging manner. An accordion number follows the chorus episode with the playing of "St. Louis Blues." Having disposed of his accordion, the young man presents a slow motion version of a "hot" dance number.

The finale finds the chorus again in white with aerial headgears, mounted on roller skates. They execute a number of splendid turns, while Jim French's Aeroplane Girls, suspended overhead, perform in an astonishing manner.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Wallace Butterworth, popular Chicago NBC announcer finds it necessary to frequently advise his feminine admirers that he is unmarried. As a matter of inside information, however, it might be said that he spends much of his time, after his closing broadcast in the evening, using the long distance wires between Chicago and Montreal. . . . Ennio Bolognini, brilliant young South American cellist, heard on programs from the Chicago NBC studios, has other musical qualifications than his cello, it has been disclosed. A few months ago Bolognini began practicing on the saxophone and now, so his musician friends declare, he has an ability with the instrument which is not surpassed by those who have studied the instrument for years. . . . Fifty cans of oil were sent by fans, to WENR during one week to be used in stopping the squeak of the curtain employed in the Weiner minstrel each Wednesday evening. The squeak, however, lingers on.

East and Dumke, those lovable Sisters of the Skillet, have been at work on health problems for their suffering sisters. Reasoning that an apple a day will keep the doctor away . . . two apples will keep two doctors away . . . while a bushel will care for an average sized clinic. These two clever artists are featured daily over the NBC "nutwork." More than ten thousand fan letters for the first two broadcasts of a new feature never before on the air is quite a record, but that is what happened when Johnny Wolfe, also known as Homesteader Johnny, began his broadcast of Jewish dialect stories on the Farm & Home Hour. The feature was first tried experimentally, to see what the public reaction would be, and was so enthusiastically received that it was made a regular feature.

George Devron opened at the Hotel LaSalle last week, replacing Husk O'Hara. George and the band just returned from a record breaking trip through the south, and he should have no trouble at all in putting over this room. Lots of luck, George old boy. . . . Danny Russo is now at the Canton Tea Garden for the summer. . . . Charlie Agnew opened at the Terrace Gardens. . . . Henri Gendron went over with a bang at the New Oriental Gardens. . . . Harold Bean, staff vocalist and announcer of KYW, has been holding out on the radio audience. It has been learned through a confiding friend that Bean is a talented violinist as well as singer and announcer. . . . Banjo Wizard on Air

Eddie Peabody, guest master of ceremonies at the St. Louis Fox theatre, presented a special banjo program over Radio Station KWK, St. Louis, April 2, for children who are members of the Tuberculosis and Health Society's radio feature, The Happy Jack Health Club. More than 1000 children have qualified for membership in this club. Admission is gained by following certain prescribed rules for health and keeping charts showing weight, etc., for a given period of time. STAGE SHOWS

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week ending May 8

Current bill is headlined by Peggy Hopkins Joyce as the first of a series of "names" booked to play this house in forthcoming weeks.

Aussie and Czeh, in "A Dash of Argentine," open at a lively tempo, featuring bolero, axe and whip manipulations, which, although offering nothing particularly new or outstanding, are, nevertheless, expertly accomplished.

Billy Lytell and Tom Fant, credited with having appeared in "The Spider" on Broadway, occupy second position, working in black face. Opening with classy tap dancing, they follow with a series of travesties on magic, closing with banjo, sax, clarinet and snare drum numbers.

The much-married Peggy, with an unprogrammed man and woman, follow with a sketch billed as "Rings On Her Fingers." This heavily publicized performer is at once the cynosure of all feminine eyes with her elaborate wardrobe. She is withal easy on the optic nerve, being comely and of fine facial attributes. Apparently suffering from a cold, her enunciation was none too perfect during the opening performance. The sketch is timely, dealing with Wall Street, although not calling for display of unusual dramatic scenes. The act closes to considerable applause.

Britt Wood, on next to closing, features jazz, classical and operatic numbers on his harmonica, the numbers being interspersed with rural chatter remindful of "Chic" Sale, while the material has done service on many previous occasions. He closes with a number of tap dances playing his own accompaniment on a guitar. Wood was the applause hit of the show.

Harry White and Alice Manning, assisted by Three Bernie Brothers and Arthur Parent, have the closing spot. Miss Manning does a series of toe dances while White clowns. In fact, much of the act is given over to clowning except dancing of the Bernies, which is rhythm itself. Miss Manning subsequently comes in for some acrobatic turns in which she is hurled about by her male partner, landing in extremely difficult positions.

12 Musicians Get Notice

Omaha—The 12 men in the stage band of the Publix World have received one month's notice. Rumors indicate either closing or change of policy as the reason.

First Appointment Made In New Managerial System

Chicago (QP)—First appointment has been made in the new system adopted by Publix for this territory, whereby managers will be responsible for both operation and advertising. Roy Kalver, former theatre manager who has been in charge for the past several years of advertising for nine local Publix theatres, has been appointed operating director of the Paramount in Detroit.

Formerly, the manager was in charge of operation only, advertising being under another executive entirely. Now theatre managers will be selected for their advertising experience as well as knowledge of operation, and appointments similar to Kalver's will be made from time to time. The recent additional appointments of division managers by Fox is expected to lead other companies to extend this system.

Warners Change Policy And Managers in North

Salem, Ore.—Elsinor and Capitol, which a few months ago were taken over by Warners from Fox and placed under management of John Stille, have again switched. Both houses will be operated directly by Los Angeles headquarters, with Jerry Laswell named as resident manager in Salem.

Marty Swartz, assistant division manager for Warners in Pacific Northwest, has appointed Harold Murphy as manager of the company's Aberdeen house, transferring Edward Fitzgerald, former manager to Los Angeles.

13 Agents Organize on Coast To Advance Business Ethics

Hollywood—The Association of Motion Pictures Artists, Representatives and Managers has been organized by 13 agents to "advance high ethical standards in the conduct of the business and foster better understanding in that business."

Officers are Frank Joyce, president; Ruth Collier, vice-president; Eddie Silton, secretary and Morris Small, treasurer. The board of governors has nine members. Other licensed agents have been invited to join.

Seattle First-Run Goes In for Double Featuring

Seattle—For the first time in many years a local first-run is presenting a "double-feature" program here this week. Jensen-Von Herberg's Liberty offers "Caught Cheating" and "Sisters," in addition to its usual program of shorts and newsreel. Usual prices of 15 cents from 9 A. M. until 7 P. M. and 30 cents thereafter still prevail.

Many of the second-run and suburban houses in this territory use occasional "double-feature" bills at infrequent intervals.

Hamrick Fires Opening Gun In New Seattle Price War

Seattle—After several months of quiet, the first-run price war has cropped up here again. John Hamrick announces a new 25c policy in his Blue Mouse, all day, every day. Children will be charged 10c at all times. This house formerly charged 25c until 1 P. M., 35c until 6 P. M. and then 50c thereafter, with loges at 75c.

ORGAN SOLOS

TED MEYN (Jersey City Loew's Jersey) presented a songfest of songs which this audience was not reluctant to sing, in fact, they all joined with a will. This solo was not as novel as Meyn is accustomed to present but it was full of entertaining and singable numbers, and Meyn's perfect freedom in his talking and ad-libbing throughout the solo proved highly entertaining. The main thing seemingly was the introduction to a new novelty song called "Up and Down the Hill" which this audience sang as if it were a hit. The solo opened with the playing by Meyn of "Tie a String Around Your Finger," then two choruses of "Two Hearts," one of which was in English, the other in German (the audience singing both of them). Meyn then introduced the novelty number by first playing a chorus, then having "Sheik" Burke sing two choruses and then having the audinece join in the singing of three or four choruses. The solo closed with the singing of "By My Side."

RALPH (New York City Loew's Paradise) gave this audience a "dose of medicine" this week, but it proved to be a most agreeable dose. His solo is entitled, "Spring Tonic" and the "medicine" consisted of the singing of songs which certainly is good medicine. Opening song was, "Spring Song" but it was presented with specially worded lyrics explaining the necessity of medicine in the spring. Very humorous and entertaining. Next a special on "Would You Like to Take a Walk?" then a comedy version on "Reuben, Reuben." The next four songs, "Reaching for the Moon," "Something to Remember You By," "99 Out of 100" and "I'm Yours" was the "dose of medicine" and this audience "took it with a smile."

BETTY HAMMOND (Publix Strand, New Orleans) offers "My Public and Me" a song slide solo which brings in Miss Hammond's versatility as an entertainer. It opens with a short organ number, then Miss Hammond sings into the microphone, which is connected with the sound horns of the screen, a paraphrase of a popular melody which bespeaks the singing prowess of her public. This is followed by the audience's joining her in singing "When Your Love Has Gone," "Running Between the Rain Drops," and "Walking My Baby Back Home." A popular solo but one lacking the usual originality shown in Miss Hammond's work.

IRIS WILKINS (Milwaukee Fox's Wisconsin). In keeping with a special program welcoming Milwaukee's baseball team to its home town, Miss Wilkins offers "Hits for the Brewers." Words are sung to popular tunes and refer to well known players on the screen. Melodies employed include "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," "Something Good Will Come from That," "Just a Gigolo" and "Hello, Beautiful." Words are flashed on the screen and the audiences enjoy the offering.

"MAC" BRIDWELL (San Antonio RKO-Majestic) offered slides, termed "Musical Remedies." Special travesty to the tune of "To Whom It May Concern"; the same on "Coming Thru the Rye," "You're the One I Care For" and "Tie a Little String Around Your Finger" and the patrons lent a fair hand to make this a pretty good organ solo.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio, Texas, theatre) presented "Yours and Mine," a novelty arrangement to the tune of "Wedding Bells Have Broken Up That Old Gang of Mine," a parody on "Honey" with the boys and girls singing a separate line each, and closing with "Sidewalks of New York," only Earl Abel called his slides "The Sidewalks of S. A."

ARLO HULTS (New York City RKO 86th) presented an entertaining song-fest entitled "Main Street" this week. This was a cleverly worded novelty boosting the "Main Streets" of every city. The introductory slide was played to the tune "Dream a Little Dream of Me." Hults, himself, sang the second chorus and then another to the tune, "Around the Corner." Arlo then turns toward the audience and makes a few announcements and ad libs, following that with his fine singing of "Dream a Little Dream of Me," the audience also joined in on the next chorus. The balance of the program consisted of the singing, both by Hults and the audience, of "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "By My Side," a special to "Hair Has Turned to Silver," a regular chorus of "Silver," and a final chorus of "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." A good solo, well delivered and well received by the audience.

GEORGE LATCH, (Hoboken Warner Fabian) offered another of his popular songfest novelties which this audience likes so well. The title of this one is "Oddities," and Latch opened with his usual theme-song, "Heigh-Ho, Everybody, Heigh-Ho." The numbers selected were: "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone," "Were You Sincere," "Two Hearts in ¾ Time" (one inu English, the second in German), "Thrill Me," and a final chorus of "Whistling in the Dark." Two choruses of the last named number were played, one a straight singing chorus and the last a whistling one. There were many "oddities" injected into the novelty and the audience apparently enjoyed the solo very much.

Hello Everybody

Little Riva Kaye, special service manageress of Santly Bros., has been threatening me with machine guns, tear gas bombs, t seven devils and, oh yes, a punch in the no if I refused to mention what she so laboriously wrote me. . . . So here it is. . . . have to satisfy my yen to columni somehow, so browbeating Eddie into submission . . . and getting my way . . . I'm a loss for words. . . . Now is that or isn that like a woman? . . . I know you've a been in the music business much longer tha I and know tremendous lots more, so won't ponder mightly and then say some thing trivial—but you can't beat me in tha feeling of belonging. . . . As to my paren age, I'm just seven years music old-bor and bred in the Santly nest (the coziest an friendliest nest imaginable); under the pa ternal wing of Lester Santly at Feist's fo five years and then fostered by Henry, Jo and Lester Santly and Harry Link eve since the beginning of Santly Bros., In . . . And what a splendid time we've ha of it. . . . Keeping the old chin up no mat ter how troubled the waters (and ye gods what waves)—and putting the old sock be hind each and every new song publishe which brings me right up to the presen day and our very latest tune—'Let a Littl Pleasure Interfere with Business' (so busi ness will be a pleasure again). . . . Littl Jack Little's the proud father—and glad t say the baby's doing well. . . . Suppose yo know Lester's in Europe doing his darndes to spread Santly 'seeds' where they'll d most good. . . . We expect him home again in about three weeks, when maybe Eddie'l let me write in his column again so I ca tell you about conditions in Europe as see by Lester. . . . We'll not go into the U. S situation; you're probably as mad about tha as we are. . . . In the meantime don't hol this biography against Eddie. . . . Remem ber it was either being 'put on the spot' o permitting the above, and you can't blame a "guy" for choosing the lesser of the two evils."

Will Rockwell is smiling expansively as usual, the result of a recent glimpse at the latest Harms, Inc., line-up of "absolute hits" (Will's very words). He merely took a sidewise glance at "Two Hearts in ¾ Time" and "Have You Forgotten" and everything took on a roseate hue (idea for joke—the crazyquilt song—"I Love Hue"). Then when he took a full look at the rest of the catalogue, he went into rhapsodies, but not "Rhapsody in Blue." . . . They have a great list, that's a cinch as seen by the way the songs are selling. . . . If you hear "The Voodoo" on the air, don't get scared. . . . It's one of Feist's new weird rumba rhythms from Cuba. . . . It's a darb. . . . Paul Van Loan, veteran bandsman and musician, and one time arranger of music for the New York Paramount, has just been appointed chief arranger for Remick's. . . .

L. Wolfe Gilbert and Jesse Greer have written a great song, in their latest effort, "Poor Kid." Edward B. Marks Music are the publishers. . . .

Space, or rather the lack of it, forces me to say, S'long.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 77

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 82—Describe the process of adjusting a Western Electric exciting lamp in its bracket so that it will be ready for immediate use. Tell us just what the "slit" is. Describe it and set forth its dimensions. Name one prime requisite if variable density film sound recording is to be picked up correctly. Why is the slit assembly sealed in position? What would be the result if the slit assembly be not set in exactly the right position? . . . . .

The question was: (A) Are horns directional? (B) What is the limit of sound distribution of horns? (C) Explain, in your own way, just what might be the effects of wrong horn positioning in a wide auditorium. (D) Should the theatre manager or projectionist believe the horn setting might be improved, what is the proper procedure if the theatre be serviced? If it be not serviced?

These questions were liberally answered so far as numbers go, but there were a great many who fell down more or less on one or more of them. Those who made good on them were: Lester Borst, Herman Billings, S. Evans and C. Rau, Leslie Gates, Thomas Arden, Neut Van Valkenburg, A. R. Speilt, Geórge D. Thompson, G. Doe, G. L. Harchard, Bill Doe, J. C. Morris, Thomas Bailey, R. A. Andersen, T. Barneman, R. A. Boyd, S. Evans, G. S. Leslie, F. D. Dinsel, John Williams, Andy Gregory, A. G. Chase, L. Thomas, S. Simms, R. Dodson, Frank D. Traildo, D. Samuels, P. L. Topeing, Samuel D. Rider, T. L. Woods, Walter Singer, W. S. Hackett, Len Lomax, D. R. Davis, Lewis Henderson, George L. Walker, William Gibson, Alex Carter, H. D. Jameson, Harry Crowley, Dan Timmerman, L. McArthur, A. R. Reisman, John Brind, A. L. Brind, F. K. Lowery, Frank Fullen, Andrew C. Case, D. McDowell, Robert Kitterson and F. D. Richards.

I use the answer of Herman Billings, which is concise and excellent. He says:

"Following is my answer to Bluebook School Question No. 77:

"A—Horns now in use on sound systems are directional.

"B—The band of sound coming from one horn covers an angle of about 40 degrees effectively.

"C—The question of the correct position for a horn or horns is one that is very important. The correct position being the one that gives the best average results in all parts of the auditorium. If the horn points straight ahead in a wide auditorium the sound will be strong in the center and fade out toward the sides. If it points down too much the sound in the balcony, if there is one, will be weak, while it is very strong in the orchestra floor. If the horns were pointed up too much, then it would be visa versa.

"D—If the projectionist or manager thinks that the horns are not properly placed they should call in the service engineer and have him readjust the horns to the best location possible.

"E—If the projectionst thinks it best to readjust the horns he should mark the present location so that he will be able to put them back if need be. He should then adjust the horns so that they give the best average sound in all parts of the house."

MICROPHONIC NOISE

Some time ago I cornered a very able projectionist, Mr. A. Coco of Loew's 175th Street theatre, and fairly pried the following very interesting and helpful data from him.

Some times the projectionist will find friend horn giving forth microphonic noise. He tests everything and it all tests out perfectly. He is up a very tall, straight stump. Incidentally, some ERPI and other service men have been on the same stump. Just plain stuck on this proposition.

If the trouble exists on both projectors, then should remove one of the 239A tubes of the 241A amplifier and, holding it upright, gently rap its prongs on some solid substance, such as the floor or table top. Care must be taken not to tap too hard or the tube will be injured. Tap it just once or twice and then replace and test. If the microphonic noise has not disappeared, remove the other tubes and treat them similarly. You may, and probably will, find that this has cured the trouble. On the other hand, if the trouble exists in only one projector, then the trouble will probably have its source in the P.E.C amplifier. In event the tubes test perfectly, then treat them as was before directed in the tubes of the 2-41 amplifier.

This bit of information may save some projectionist, and even some service men considerable embarrassment because, remembering that everything has tested out perfectly, it is hard to know exactly what to do.

Another stunt: Often if the idler roller of the sound sprocket, which same is attached to the bottom of the sound gate, rides the film too heavily it will generate microphonic noise, which same will be picked up by the sound system. Moreover, this particular brand of noise does not sound any too gorgeous. The method of getting rid of it is very simple:

On the outside of the head is a small round wheel for the purpose of adjusting the tension of the sound gate. In the face of this wheel you will find a small screw, which is merely for the purpose of locking the wheel in position.

Start your projector, either with or without a film in it, it makes no differenee, and, pressing your thumb lightly on the lower part of the sound gate, turn the wheel until no vibration is felt, whereupon set up the lock screw tight and you will find the microphonic noise will have disappeared. You should test the gate occasionally by pressing it lightly with your finger. If there is any vibration at all, it should be eliminated as above.

Microphonic noise may be found when the sound gate is in perfect adjustment and the 2-41 and other tubes are all right. Sometimes this is due to microphonic noise set up in the recording of the film. This may be, in a measure, taken care of as follows: Put on the headphones and move the exciting lamp slightly out of the adjustment, either up or down, which ever way seems to get the best results. Don't overdo this or you will lose a lot of volume. You will, of course, lose a little volume if the lamp was in perfect adjustment, but unless you move it too far it will not be very noticeable and you will have reduced the microphonic trouble by at least 75 per cent. Let it be clearly understood this is only a stunt to be used where the microphonic noise is in the film itself

June 1

Arrived in Hollywood and was photographed by 12,000 photographers. Went to hotel. Threw party until six this morning. So far pictures are O.K. with kingie.

June 2

What kind of a place is this? A man from the picture company came for me at 8:30 this morning. Remonstrated with him. Explained how I never got up before 1 p.m. Man pushed paper under my nose and said I signed contract. Vulgar. Newspapers have my name wrong. Refer to me as Alfred. Have notified publicity men of mistake.

June 3

Took what is called a screen test yesterday. Man put grease, cold cream, powder, rouge, mascara and lipstick on my face. Was made to stand before a camera and recite "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party." Kept saying "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the Royalist party," but no one noticed it. Figure this is good propaganda. Wish prop men would stop calling me "Alfie."

June 4

Have had my moustache shaved off. I objected for two hours, but vulgar person said I signed contract giving company exclusive permission to cut moustache. I, a Bourbon, the first man in my family not to wear a moustache in the last 800 years. Company also wants to change my name. Do not like Alfonso XII. They claim it looks as though I wasn't important enough Want me to be called Alfonso I. Explained to them the impossibility of this, but they showed me contract. Lucky for me the old man isn't around.

June 5

Shooting began today. This means photographing the film. Director calling me "Alf." I have not read the story as yet, but I understand from my secretary that I must fall off a horse. Not me. Not a Bourbon. Maybe a Windsor. But not a Bourbon. Understand further that I dive off a cliff into two feet of water in one scene. Nuts! They're not going to get any king diving into no two feet of water while I'm around. Let them use a duke!

June 6

O boy! Did we have a scene on the set yesterday? We were shooting that part of the story where I say to Miss Coochie, "Babeh, babeh, gimme a kiss." Well, the missus had to come visiting around just as I get the royal elbow around the gal. She runs over and says, "This must cease." I start arguing with her. "Now, mommer," I say, "this is only a picture." "Says you," says the Queen, and there was nothing for us to do but to change the scene. So I kiss her hand. I'm afraid Mommer still thinks she's a Queen.

June 7

Had a little trouble today with a supervisor. I was supposed to wear evening clothes and I used the wardrobe I kept from a couple months ago. Well, the wise guy supervisor said I was dressed like a yokel; that I didn't hold my cane right, that I should be wearing a derby, and that when I put a monocle in my eye I should open my mouth. I began to explain to him about some of these points, but he wouldn't listen.

June 8

Just got a letter from the manager of the Royalist Party in Spain. He thinks he's got it fixed for me to go back. I don't know, though. I got a debt to my public now. The King business is all right for a start, but for an up and at 'em career—give me the pictures any time. King George is thrown in free in the newsreels—but you have to pay to see George Arliss. He's no better than I am. Just got a better break. Some fellers have all the luck. He was born with a silver spoon in his mouth.

June 9

They're giving all the close-ups to Miss Choochie. Who do they think they got here? A ham? I'm going to raise a fuss in the front office they'll smell in New York. I got some rights. I got a contract. I'll call out the army and navy. Close-ups of Miss Choochie? The idea! You'd think she was the king or somebody.

June 10

Am quitting. The advertising's got me down as "That red hot Spanish lover." Spanish? We Bourbons aren't Spanish. We're French. Where do they get off putting the title in larger type than my name? Where do they get off making it a gangster picture? I knew there was something funny about it. I'm going back to Spain and start my own studio. I'd like to see Coochie get a close-up in my country.

Child Patronage Would Be Ended By New Ill. Bill

Chicago—An example of the extremes to which interests unfriendly to the industry will go in their efforts to interfere with it is provided in a bill introduced in the state legislature at Springfield recently directed at regulation of child patronage.

The bill seeks to make a misdemeanor, subject to a fine of not less than $50 and not more than $200, of permitting a child of less than 16 years to enter a theatre or other place of amusement "at a time when a picture, pictures or series of pictures are being exhibited portraying the commission of a crime or any act that is punishable by a fine or imprisonment or both under the law of this state."

Even the legislators smiled over this bill. If passed, it could keep juveniles from viewing such specifically child productions as "Skippy," wherein the young hero is depicted filching a loaf of bread from the home pantry—obviously an act punishable under the law of the state.

Illinois State Censor Bill Is Expected to Be Shelved

Chicago—Discussion of the Ryan state censor bill was deferred following a reading in a house committee at Springfield. Industry representatives believe the measure will be tabled since its proponents are not active and opposition is strong.

Watching the situation for the industry are C. C. Pettijohn, Edna Pfister, secretary of the Chicago Film Board of Trade, Jack Miller, president of the Chicago exhibitors' group, and others.

Hearst Paper Urges Exhibitors To Show Ad Film

Chicago (QP)—Chicago exhibitors were urged to book a feature length sponsored film which was reviewed in Hearst's Chicago Evening American by Rob Reel (Hazel Flynn), picture critic, who devoted almost three times the customary space allotted movie reviews to her discussion of the advertising production. The picture, titled "Romance of the Reaper," was produced and is being exhibited by International Harvester.

After lauding the production extravagantly in her essay which included a pointed suggestion that producers look to the field of American industrialism rather than to Broadway and the world of fiction for their source material, Miss Flynn concludes: "As to where, when or whether you will see 'Romance of the Reaper' or not, that depends on a lot of things. If there is some local exhibitor with vision enough to realize that such an offering would be out of the ordinary run and of tremendous interest to the public, you will."

The picture tells the story of the life of Cyrus Hall McCormick, his invention of the reaper and its development by the company he founded—International Harvester. Its cast has been selected from the ranks of professionals, as has its technical staff, and a lavish variety of costumes is used.

Baynes vs. Castle

The week's record in the controversial field of screen advertising was enlivened by the appearance of an article in Editor & Publisher The Fourth Estate by Eugene W. Castle of Castle Films, in which he, as a producer of industrial films, of which he says "no one pays to see them, either as entertainment or advertising," sounded a tocsin of alarm to editors, publishers and advertisers against advertising on theatre screens. In the course of his article he devoted some considerable discussion to a nameless reference to the Kinograms-Allied States Association project for a newsreel with a 30 percent advertising content.

This discussion drew the fire of a letter to the publication from Captain George McLeod Baynes of Kinograms, who set forth the assertion that the advertising content of the Kinograms-Allied reel would be brief and avowed. In the course of his letter Captain Baynes said that he had, "after a campaign of only three weeks more than 2,000 theatres under signed contracts," and that he has with Allied a contract for a term of five years.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Quality and —!

JUST A FEW SAMPLES OF WHAT I took out of the film cans lately—

"Rough Romance" (Fox)—Paid for a feature, but only received an action short. Ran 56 minutes. Just fair. On same program a chapter of "The Indians Are Coming," and it ran only 14 minutes, so my entire program ran 1 hour and 10 minutes. This is robbery.

"Liliom" (Fox)—Another highbrow headache for the small town boys. Did not draw much and nobody could figure out what it was all about. Farrell fitted in his role just about like a lady does in knickers.

"Fighting Caravans" (Paramount)—The only thing big about this western is the price. Gary Cooper good, but Miss Damita is lost in her part. Just an ordinary western.

"Sarah and Son" (Paramount)—Pretty old, but a great picture. Was made when the producers were spending money on their pictures. Acting is one thing this Chatterton gal can do.

"War Nurse" (M-G-M)—R. Montgomery and Anita Page good in this. A good story, but director messed it up. Didn't draw much.

"Morocco" (Paramount)—Drew very good and Marlene Dietrich drew many favorable comments. Cooper good, too. Story and direction were very slow and got tiresome. More action, please. Movies must move.

"Along Came Youth" (Paramount)—The two-year kid that wrote this story should be spanked and put back in his cradle. Rogers is popular here, but the stories they have been handing him are sappy. Stu Erwin and Miss Dee good.

"No Limit" (Paramount)—The same kid as above wrote this one, too. Another silly story. "Cheapness" is written all over this production. Clara Bow can act and is still a fair draw.

"Derelict" (Paramount)—Very good. George Bancroft fine in this and it has some action to it. Most of Paramount's late releases are too short. They make them to fit their presentation houses—but how about us hicks?

"Sea Legs" (Paramount)—Sixty minutes of film and no story visible. Just a bunch of foolishness and pie slinging. Jack Oakie, a fine supporting comedian, makes a mighty weak star (?).

"On Your Back" (Fox)—One of their "selling" pictures, so they spent some money on it. Irene Rich great, and gorgeous style show and production.

"Min and Bill" (M-G-M)—Expected much business after reading great comments and reviews, but had very small crowd. Ran 61 minutes. Is that a feature? My folks were disappointed, and so was I.

"Free Love" (Universal)—One hour of talking and 10 minutes of action. Very tiresome. Conrad Nagel and Miss Tobin great, but make 'em do something.

"See America Thirst" (Universal)—Here's a great two-reel comedy ruined to make a feature. Harry Langdon and Slim good for a while, but too much of them is too much. No good for small towns.

"The Lady Surrenders" (Universal)—A wonderful picture for the Little Theatre Groups, but they don't come to the picture shows. Let them have this sophisticated, tiresome stuff. No laffs—no action—just talk.—L. L. Levy, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Texas.

Urges Department's Return

TO TELL YOU THAT MY RESTRAINT has given away, and that Nature's law of intermittent explosions at last demands obedience is to state my mental condition mildly.

I am of the woods, and woody; and I would give the Herald, and all its pleasures, and all its pomps, and all its powers for one slight glimpse of "What the Picture Did for Me."

While I am pleased that the Herald continues its forward march in the field of picture publications, I find that its best department, and, I opine, the one that contributed most to its vigorous growth, has been suppressed. There may be reason for discontinuing exhibitor reports, perhaps exhibitors themselves are to blame (I plead guilty), but whatever the reasons, out here on the mountain I am lost without that department.

If "What the Picture Did for Me" had been a going concern the past year, I should not have shown such abominations and near-abominations as "Paris Bound," "Lady of Scandal," "Are You There?" "Strictly Unconventional," "Children of Pleasure' and a lot of others, including the "worcest" of the worst, "Divorce."

I had almost lost faith, blaming it on your merger business, until your editorial anent the kind of pictures Hollywood was making reassured me that somewhere the spirit of the old Herald still survived.

At that, you are showing evidences of Ritziosity that bear heavily in the heart of humble and devout disciples of the old magazine, but I shall not despair. It is the glamour of the bright lights of Broadway, the blandishments and flattery of the big city "slickers" that are drawing you from the straight and narrow path. Yet I believe that virtue is too deeply rooted in you for you to permanently forget your "raisin."

Some day I expect the Herald to cast off the gilt and tinsel and boldly declare that the producers and distributors, including Will Hays, are not yet ready for cannonization, and that every picture released is not a symphony of delight to ear and eye, nor a house-bursting "pull-them-in." And then, we mountaineers shall, sooner or later, regain our equilibrium.—Joseph Gray, Gray theatre, Spangler, Pa.

A Trip Abroad

EVERYTIME A STAR MAKES A PICture he or she takes a trip to Europe. The distributor wants the exhibitor to pay a flat rental (which is exorbitant to begin with), and before he could get enough to pay his rent and light bill, Mr. Distributor wants a split on this picture.

Mr. and Mrs. Star will either spend their vacations at home on greatly reduced incomes, and Mr. Distributor will take a price in comparison with the theatre exhibiting same, or said Mr. Distributor will soon be compelled to exhibit his picture solely through his privately owned theatres.

All other commodities have declined in price.

This greatly unbalanced situation in the picture business cannot continue.—W. C. Adair, Waelder, Texas.

School and Screen Praised

HAVE READ CAREFULLY YOUR INitial article on School and Screen and consider this section a very valuable addition to the Motion Picture Herald. A vast amount of good should be accomplished through it.—Ned E. Depinet, RKO Pathe Distributing Corporation, New York City.

Analyzing New Films

SOME BRIEF REPORTS ON LATE PICTURES—"Rango." People liked this and it is the best of the wild animal pictures so far.

"Sunny." A nice old picture that people liked. Music is catchy and the cast is fine.

"A Man of the World." William Powell in another gangster picture that is up to the average but we are tired of them.

"Behind Office Doors." Mary Astor at her best. This was a fine picture and as the boss was a bachelor it did not have the suggested moral tone that we small town exhibitors must fear.

"The Command Performance." Better than a lot of more expensive pictures. Good cast and direction, though the little lady plays the part of a foreign wench too naturally to be popular.

"No Limit." Is good entertainment with Clara Bow, and people come to see her in spite of unfriendly publicity—or is it because of?

"Millie." A good picture but one Radio has overpriced. Pictures of this type seem to be made by the dozen and they should be so sold.

"Cimarron." This is the most universally pleasing picture I have ever shown. It has a bad ending but the story so ended and the people expect the end to be what it is. Business was fine on this.

"The Lash." A good story and a fair cast, making a good picture. Southern California Robin Hood hero in the fifties and interesting.

"Unfaithful." Ruth Chatterton in another just like the others. She is good but unhappy. People didn't care to see it the second night.

"Gun Smoke." This is a real picture and the folks liked it. We all wanted to know what would happen if the big bold city boys that shoot their enemies in the back mixed with the wild West and they do here.

"One Heavenly Night." Not for the box office. A good picture but didn't seem to be popular. Over-priced, but that's my fault.

"The Royal Bed." A dandy picture from a dumb somebody who took a good catch titled story "The Queen's Husband" that just fitted the show, and made a bedroom picture out of it. Forget the title and it's good.

"Sally." Worth going back after and showing to pleased people. It was a good show and always will be. The print was fair.

"Skippy." This is a great picture. It broke my house record for kid admissions and did the smallest Sunday's gross I have done for months. Adults like it but they just won't come. The kids do and you will be proud of having run it. It's fine entertainment.

"City Lights." My biggest disappointment of the year. Flopped flat. They think it must be cheap and poor when it doesn't talk. I liked it but people don't want to see it. If Charlie can't talk, he should let his supporting cast do it. This high art Pilgrim stuff is all right, but the baby needs shoes.

"Honor Among Lovers." Have seen it, and it's fine. "Trader Horn" is highly over-rated. I enjoyed "Africa Speaks" and "Rango" much more. "Ten Cents a Dance" is just a poor imitation of "Honor Among Lovers," and "The Hot Heiress" is a good two-reel comedy. "Gentlemen of the Press" is still a good show. Ditto "The Criminal Code." Good story, well handled by Walter Huston.

And the Vitaphone acts are getting no better fast. I still think "Strange As It Seems" the best short on my program, and one-reel comedies better than two, because you don't get so tired waiting for them to be shown.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand theatre, Pierre, S. D.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed acording to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

Today is the golden age for showmanship advertising, and motion picture interests are leaders in taking advantage of it.

Such is the belief of men who for years have watched the trend of showmanship merchandising.

A period of depression, according to these men, "is meat and drink for any advertising man who loves his work" and who gets "an unholy joy" in seeing actual results from his efforts.

The nature of the motion picture business, these men observe, makes it necessary for the picture and theatre advertiser to be keenly alert for he must expend more effort weekly than is required in "soap and soup campaigns for a year."

These men point out that because of rapid turnover the motion picture advertiser must plan copy with an immediate appeal to the eye. Not only must it appeal to the eye, but it must also create reader interest and prove a point.

Those who have expressed their opinions for MOTION PICTURE HERALD see a trend toward down-to-earth copy, a trend in which motion picture advertising has set a pace.

"Today," R. H. Cochrane of Universal, told the HERALD, "real advertising has come into its own again. The dubs and amateurs have fallen by the wayside. Space fillers are now trying to sell themselves instead of somebody's product. This means that it is the golden age for advertising and real honest to goodness advertising men."

Mass appeal in advertising copy is a vital element, in the opinion of Glendon Allvine of Fox. "In our exhibitor advertising as well as in that directed to the public, we have always realized that mass appeal is more important commercially than art and copy appreciated only by the cultured few," he said. "There used to be a tendency on the part of non-theatrical advertisers to sneer at motion picture methods. But those who came to scoff have remained to pray."

They Say—

by R. H. COCHRANE

Vice-president and general manager Universal

A period of depression is meat and drink for any advertising man who loves his work. The real advertising man does not limit his fun to the mere wording of an advertisement with a suitable layout. The thing that gives him an unholy joy is to see actual results pouring in from his efforts.

In the recent good times any man with a pencil could get results. But now it takes advertising brains to get under the skin of the dearly beloved public sufficiently deep to make them spend money for entertainment or anything else.

Today real advertising comes into its own again. The dubs and amateurs have fallen by the wayside. Space-fillers are now trying to sell themselves instead of somebody's product. This means it is the golden age for advertising and real honest-to-God advertising men.

Never was there a time when they had greater reason to roll up their mental sleeves and enter into their work, with more zest and deep rooted pleasure and satisfaction.

Selling a good picture to the thrifty public today is infinitely harder than it was a year ago and, therefore, infinitely more fun and more worth fighting for.

Advertising, without the shadow of a doubt—and I mean good advertising—is the first step upward from any business depression, including the one we now have with us.

Motion picture advertising does a more varied job of selling and gives greater opportunities for the advertising man to show his talents than any other field of commercial advertising.

The advertising man in our business has a different story to tell each week. With each new picture there is a new problem of selling. In spite of this quick turn-over in ideas, motion picture advertising today is more forceful, vital and attractive than that

146 Needed for Technical and Writing Staffs for Each Picture, Exclusive of Players

Hollywood (QP)—Did you know that one can rub elbows with the talking picture industry for years and years, yet every day bump into some startling fact?

It requires 146 people, all directly and actively engaged, only for the back stage work in a picture with a cast of perhaps five featured and no extra players.

Here's an itemized list:

20 men in the lumber mill, roughing out the settings.
20 carpenters to set up the background.
6 painters to decorate them.
20 members of the art department, who do the interior decorating and furnishing, and all architectural work.
1 art director who directly supervises settings, furnishings and costumes.
20 seamstresses to make the costumes.
8 electricians, handling the lights upon the stages.
1 author.
1 adaptor.
1 dialogue writer.
2 make-up men, on duty on the set at all times.
6 grips, laborers, constantly on the jump moving things about.
3 sound men, the mixer, the "mike" man and the recordist.
1 director.
3 assistant directors.
1 casting director.
2 script girls.

And that is just a generalized list, and applies merely to those productions made entirely on the lot where every facility for picture making is at hand. The personnel leaps to larger figures on location work.

Laemmle "In" London By Wire For Award

Universal Chief "Attends" Formal Honor Event for "All Quiet" By Transatlantic Phone

By means of transatlantic telephone, Carl Laemmle "attended" the dinner in London of the Faculty of Arts given for the purpose of formally awarding Universal's "All Quiet On the Western Front" the 1930 gold medal of that body presented annually for the year's outstanding achievement in the arts.

Prevented from attending by the Universal convention, Laemmle spoke by telephone from the convention hall at the St. Moritz hotel in New York. Previously he was notified by telephone of the award, Sir Arthur Crosfield, president of the Faculty, making the official announcement. The Faculty members assembled heard Laemmle's response from loud speakers attached through an amplification system to the telephone connection.

"I cannot promise you another 'All Quiet On the Western Front'," said Laemmle in his reply. "It would be an anti-climax, certainly, for us to attempt one. But we have another story by the same author, Erich Maria Remarque, which I am going to endeavor to produce in every way to justify it as a sequel."

The award was actually received on behalf of Universal by James V. Bryson, managing director of Universal in Great Britain.

Double Bills to Go Into Tampa Each Thursday

Tampa—The double feature program has just arrived in the big downtown houses. The Victory advertised "Old Favorite Night" for each Thursday, and that night each week one of the old favorites will be added to the regular program without any extra charge.

A screen announcement lists a number of available films and asks the audience to register their requests at the box office.

At the Park a double feature bill was presented for the last half of the week. This is the first time the big houses have used double feature bills, but it was used a few times in the Ybor City section.

Ted Champion Back as Hamrick's Ad Director

Seattle—William (Ted) Champion, former advertising director for John Hamrick's Blue Mouse and Music Box theatres, and previous to that associated with the advertising department of Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., has returned to his former position in the Hamrick organization.

He succeeds J. Willis Sayre, pioneer publicity director of this territory, who is retiring from active work in the local theatre field.

Paramount pictures have been a leader in the use of national advertising for more than 14 years and have profited materially through the stability this form of advertising gives to the company and its trademark. by S. CHARLES EINFELD

Director of advertising and publicity
Warner Brothers-First National

Advertising is news. The first man to make this statement was looked at askance as if there were something wrong with him. Today the statement is universally accepted.

Advertising has assumed an importance that cannot be measured. There is more money spent on it in this age than was spent on the needs of the federal government during the days following the Civil War. Advertising has grown by leaps and bounds until it has now reached its golden age. It is the dominating medium in the hands of every individual throughout the whole world who has anything to sell. Without it the biggest and strongest concerns would wither into dust. It keeps the world alive and on its toes.

There is not a big manufacturing organization in the world which does not budget a certain percentage of its earnings each year for advertising purposes. Firms which a few years ago did comparatively little advertising now appropriate sums that run into seven figures. Warner Brothers Pictures are today among the heaviest advertisers in the country. Annually the company and its affiliates, First National and Vitaphone Corporation, spend millions in calling the attention of the world to its product.

It is strange, however, that with the influx of brains into the advertising profession, for profession it is, there remain in it so many men who do not fully realize the full power of printer's ink. They miss fire, get on the wrong track and fail to get results. The object back of every one of our announcements is the sale of something the public wants. Any salesman who attempts to sell what is not wanted is doomed to failure. The crux of the matter in the picture industry as well as in the merchandise field lies in finding out just what the public does want. This requires vision. Once the public needs are correctly diagnosed it is up to the advertising man to go to work.

The avowed policy of Warner Brothers, First National and Vitaphone for the coming season is the exploitation of stars. The company believes in the dominance of personalities. For the use of its stars the production departments must provide stories that will please the ever-varying taste of the public. To do this the production chiefs must keep their fingers on the pulse of the people in order to find out just what it is the public does want. As a matter of fact, the production departments must go further—they must anticipate the tastes of the people and be a step or two in advance of the trend.

What is true of the production department in keeping in advance of the times is also true of the advertising department, if it is to properly function. The advertising department must take the finished product and sell it for what it is worth.

It is well known now that advertising to have weight must be basically sound. In other words, it must be sincere and honest. This is one reason why advertising has such a great pull.

In launching our next season's product we mean to advertise it through one of the most comprehensive campaigns that we have ever put into operation. We believe in the use of printer's ink, something which will be made clearer than ever in this campaign.

Very often it takes courage to use an advertising appropriation to put over a theme that is new to the public. But an advertising man without courage is not an advertising man.

We insist that all our advertising be interesting, attractive and informative. The world is awakening to the fact that advertising can be made cheerful, buoyant and also dramatic. To the average motion picture company what can be more important than the accessories gotten out to advertise the pictures it produces? The Warner-First National advertising departments concentrate on not only getting out a fine line of accessories, but in seeing to it that the exhibitor for whose benefit they are destined is made to see in attractive ads just what kind of help is ready at his hand with which to reach the public.

No man is impervious to skilful advertising. Catch his eye, interest him and then prove that what you are offering is just what he wants. Once convinced it is amazing to what lengths he will go to get what you are selling. Proof of this is all about. We got it of a Sunday recently when during a terrific rain storm crowds stood in a driving rain waiting to get into our Broadway theatres to see the pictures we had on view.

How illuminative those lines were! And how they proved the power and efficiency of our advertising! A good campaign is worth its weight in gold. But it is not left for every advertising man to plan one. This is what makes advertising so interesting and is bringing it into the realms of art.

In the decade that I have been watching—and writing—motion picture advertising, I have seen it set the pace for down-to-earth copy for commercial advertising. The institutional stuff and prestige copy, so dear to some advertising agencies, has gone into a decline as immediate sales results have been demonstrated with direct merchandising copy. A comparison of cigarette advertising today with that of several years ago illustrates the point. They have come down to earth with the movies.

In our exhibitor advertising as well as in that directed to the public, we have always realized that mass appeal is more important commercially than art and copy appreciated only by the cultured few. There used to be a tendency on the part of non-theatrical advertisers to sneer at motion picture methods. But those who came to scoff have remained to pray.

We have a new product once a week, and we put more merchandising effort and advertising intelligence into selling that new product every week than go into many large soap or soup campaigns in the course of a year.

Exploitation and showmanship is just our nomenclature for the dramatic advertising methods which are being adopted by other industries.

Because the primary purpose of advertising is to induce a desire to buy the commodity advertised in preference to the competitor's, it is necessary to make commodity, whether it be a suit of clothes or entertainment, as attractive as possible from standpoints of satisfaction and value. Just as no alert merchant will overlook a single selling point in his advertising, since a seemingly minor one will intrigue some people perhaps not otherwise interested, just so no exhibitor will neglect to take advantage of the box office swelling-powers of the short feature.

As director of advertising for a short feature company for several years, I have hammered away persistently at the importance of playing up the short comedy in advertising and exploitation, as it means extra dollars to the box office.

For two reasons, I sincerely believe it is now more important than ever before to tempt movie patrons with attractive programs of which variety is an inherent element. Satiation has resulted from long double-feature programs, and the trend now is inevitably in the other direction, with diversity of offerings replacing long feature programs. Those who have had too much of the "double feature" may be weaned back to the theatre with a well balanced program.

Again, the drawing of short features has been tested many times past. T appeal of such names as Mack Se nett, Andy Clyde, Charlotte Gree wood, Terry-Toons, Ford Sterlin Bert Roach, the Chimps, etc., from o own organization, and Laurel a Hardy, Our Gang, etc., from other o ganizations is certainly not to be i nored by the exhibitor who wishes derive the maximum benefits from h program.

Director of advertising
Sono Art-World Wide Pictures, In

Showmanship in modern motion pi ture advertising calls upon the mer chandising skill and resources of th exhibitor to an unparalleled degree. I the background of his experience mu be an accurate knowledge of the pre erence of his patronage plus an abilit to analyze the product which he i selling. He must ferret out those ele ments of appeal in any picture whic are most likely to capture the imagina tion of his potential audience, and up on these he must place the greates emphasis in his advertising. His ex perience with his own locality will dic tate the angles which are of major in terest.

Today's trend in advertising merchandise generally is relying increasingly for its effect on an immediate eye-appeal. The success of the tabloid newspaper provides a striking example for the guidance of the advertiser—and especially for the motion picture showman. Pictures, rather than text; eye-appeal, rather than rhetoric is the persuasive weapon of the day. The effect must be swift, immediate—sensational, if you will, but it must operate primarily through the use of vivid illustration.

What can be more logical, then, than for the showman to adapt for advertising purposes the essential quality of the entertainment that he sells to the public? In other words, advertise pictures with pictures? If, as an example, automatic refrigerators can be put over to the public through a series of ads dominated entirely by an interest-getting photograph, it must be obvious that a talking picture can deliver its sales message with even greater force through similar means.

With a product that calls upon the resources of all the arts for its making, with theatres that represent the ultimate in comfort and luxury, the motion picture advertiser enjoys a unique opportunity to display his individuality in merchandising his entertainment. An intimate knowledge of audience reaction, added to a mental slant that is just a step ahead of the obvious, should enable the alert showman to reap rewards commensurate with his ability.

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

WITHIN the past two weeks the large producing companies have released their tentative programs for the next 12 months, and these we have scanned with more than common interest, and not a little anxiety. In all of the impressive schedules two significant facts stand out: First, that sex and gangster pictures are on the wane; second, that there is a concerted movement on the part of the producers to supply adequate features and shorts to meet the leaping demands of juvenile patronage.

William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of production of RKO said at the recent sales convention of his organization: "For us, sex and gangster pictures are out! We will replace them by productions depicting healthier and more virile phases of life. Strong melodrama and comedies stressing the normal and human side of living will be our new policy. We will add colorful adventure and interesting metropolitan background, with glamor, romance, and the spell of illusion as dominant keynotes."

Carl Laemmle in a personal interview within the past few days said, with that forward looking wisdom that has made him a dominant figure in motion picture making: "This year we shall specialize in things for children—good things, clean and fine entertainment. We plan to make more serials, a whole series of two-reel juvenile subjects, and an outstanding feature in 'Peck's Bad Boy'."

These encouraging predictions, like fresh wind from the sea, should bring sunny weather to your box office in the coming year! Your public is as eager as you have been for a lifting of the fog.

Children the World Over

Apparently, children in every country are fundamentally alike in their movie tastes, whether in Sydney, Bombay, the Ukraine, America, Japan or Russia. A formal study was made recently of 370 children of school age in Kharkov in an attempt to classify their reactions to their screen entertainment. Half of these Russian children were found to be attending motion pictures at least once a week, and were practically unanimous in declaring the cinema to be their favorite form of amusement.

The traditionally melancholy Slavic temperament did not reveal itself in their frank answers. On the contrary, comedies were their first choice, with those relating to sports next in order. Third in place were films of the Russian revolution and these were followed by pictures of adventure. Strictly educational films were the least popular because, of course, they lacked the elements of excitement and combat which were characteristic of their favorite pictures.

The educators who made the survey are taking these preferences into serious consideration in making a new school film library.

Sentenced to the Movies

With fine psychology, and a true understanding of what the motion picture does mean to the average boy or girl, probation officer John H. McElroy of Providence, R. I., decided, with the ancient philosopher that "you can catch more flies with molasses than vinegar." He does not believe, with the New York Times, that every budding criminal has been taught waywardness by the movies. On the other hand, he has undertaken to use the local movies as a corrective measure for the young delinquents who have become his charges. The Hollywood theatre in East Providence, cooperating with Officer McElroy, offers 20 tickets each week for the Saturday morning show, for those boys on parole whose report cards from their teachers bear the highest ratings. This has stimulated a competition in being good among boys who have made themselves conspicuous by trying to be bad. There is a thought in it that makes one pause for a moment, to consider!

Mary Pickford Offers Suggestion

Mary Pickford whose interpretation of children's parts won her the first of her triumphs says now she realizes that not enough pictures have been made especially for children, but that she believes the current development in this direction is of tremendous importance. At the same time she stands squarely against the possibility of all pictures being made to the level of children.

"The answer," she declares, "is for parents to choose the pictures suitable for their children to see. It is not difficult to select the right pictures and send the children to the theatres where they are playing. The motion picture industry does not want children to go indiscriminately. This whole problem of the maladjustment of children to certain pictures is one for serious parental thought and responsibility. If the screen is going to be a household article the family has to know how to use it intelligently. A housewife would not give her children a rare Sevres vase or a loaded revolver to play with!"

In the word "selection" Miss Pickford has sounded the keynote for the parents, and women's clubs of the country. And it is a word for the theatreman to remember when he is reproached for booking worthwhile adult entertainment.

The Loew Theatres Act

Within the past week the three Loew theatres of Cleveland have begun a series of Saturday morning matinees for children. These were in accordance with the new policy recently announced by Loew theatres over the country. The managers have planned entertainment of special interest to young people, their program to start promptly at 10:30 on Saturday mornings. The three houses in Cleveland have booked for this week George O'Brien in "The Last of the Duanes"; and "Our Gang Comedy"; a "Flip the Frog" cartoon and the best newsreels. The admission price has been made less than half the ordinary charge. Two of the theatres have arranged for added attractions to the regular program. In one, a dancing class of 450 children will be a featured number—and a valuable one! At another, there will be a pony show sponsored by the merchants of the town. The third theatre has arranged for a showing of "The Lone Star Ranger."

"We are trying," Loew officials said, "to give chiefly Western features at these Saturday morning matinees for children for the very simple reason that the children love them. They frankly do not want society dramas or problem plays, and so we shall try to give them what they do want!"

Massachusetts Women's Clubs

An attractive small gray folder from the State Federation of Women's Clubs of Massachusetts has listed importantly, among their activities, the work for better motion pictures. They announce as their slogan "Cooperation, Not Censorship, Makes the Best Pictures Pay Best." The aims of the groups are defined:

1. Cooperative support of good pictures.

2. Development of programs for children.

Their program is as follows:

1. A Motion Picture Chairman in every club.

2. Establishment of contact with exhibitors and producers in order that suggestions and wishes of the Federation may be made known directly to the motion picture industry.

3. To keep the departments of the Federation advised of motion pictures which they can use in furtherance of their departmental work and to assist whenever practical, to obtain such productions.

4. To classify and to make available to the membership, insofar as possible, lists of films of special interest and value, in an effort to guide motion picture attendance.

5. To encourage Family Night programs and to give support to programs for children when suitably presented.

6. To encourage each club to devote at least one meeting a year to the study of the motion picture in order that the problems which face us and the industry alike may be better understood.

7. With your own club as a nucleus, solicit the interest of every organization in town and organize a Motion Pictures Council to work for and support better pictures in your communities.

Facts Worth Remembering

It is estimated that more than 115 million people go to motion pictures every week. Due to non-support some of our best pictures have been shown at a tremendous loss to the producers. Select your motion picture entertainment as carefully as you would your drama, or your books. If a picture pleases you, tell your friends; if not, tell your exhibitor. You should also take the time and trouble to write your criticisms directly to the Motion Pictures Producers & Distributors of America at 28 West 44th Street, New York City.

Suffern Sets an Example

In Bergen country, New Jersey, and Rockland county, New York, adjacent counties meeting at the dividing lines of the states, a bus line has been established on a Saturday morning schedule to take hundreds of eager youngsters to the town of Suffern where special Saturday morning matinees are given for their particular benefit. From a dozen towns they come, Tuxedo and Nyack, Haverstraw and Ridgewood, more than 1,000 of them, and it is, for these gay young passengers, the happiest day of the week. At the door of the movie house buses and autos unload groups of enthusiastic youngsters who greet each other with cheers and yells of delight upon arrival. Some come with their parents; while a line, a block long, waits patiently for the hostesses to arrive who are to sponsor their admission.

Two inexperienced but courageous women began this astonishing adventure in better pictures in the community for children. They believed that boys and girls could be trained to appreciate artistic, educational and moral values in their entertainment, and that with the taste properly developed in their youth they would grow up as intelligent citizens demanding the best that the screen, or literature or the stage might have to offer. These young mothers, Mrs. F. F. Russell and Mrs. Ogden B. Hewitt have brought the children's programs through a first season into a second established year of success. They select the program features—an educational film, a comedy, a newsreel and a clean feature picture which keep the children amused for nearly two hours. Each week's program is sent in advance to the schools and some school work is attempted in coordination with it.

"We think our experience proves," Mrs. Hewitt says, "that even rural communities can have selected motion picture programs. The mothers of these towns feel safe in putting their children on a bus on Saturday mornings. Our Fire Chief and Chief of Police wouldn't miss coming every week. They enjoy it as much as the youngsters. These officials watch traffic after the show and keep things moving smoothly and safely."

With the club women of the country taking the situation into their hands there is active need for exhibitors to cooperate and collaborate!

THE SPIRIT OF ENDEAVOR

By WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

Holds Coordination of Studio Activity Is Responsible for Such Films as "Cimarron"

To bring out to its Los Angeles nvention not only the branch man-ers but also its entire army of sales-en, Radio Pictures must have had a ghty good reason.

And so there was.

The idea was to show a studio to ese continental voyagers; and Radio s a studio worth showing.

When I first saw "Cimarron" I uld envision through the picture the udio that brought it into being. Here, ainly, was evidence of about the nest and most complete coordination studio activity in all picture annals. Vriting, direction, supervision, pho-graphy, costuming, sets, makeup, ound recording—it was clear that in very effort those concerned had put orth with rare cooperation the very est that was in them.

And there you have the distinctive haracter of Radio Pictures produc-ion.

Its spirit of endeavor!

I asked a man who works there, icking him at random, how he felt bout the studio. He has been eight ears in Hollywood.

His words fairly bubbled forth.

"I'll tell you," he said. "Ask most any director, writer, player, technician in Hollywood, and they'll tell you they'd like to work for Radio.

"They like the spirit of the place. You can get anything you want from any department—the best they have and can give. Everyone's up on their toes, to deliver. Morale, cooperation, enthusiasm rule the place—in short, a tremendously efficient staff of willing workers."

Well, that's a good deal to say; and it means a good deal.

It is spirit that makes pictures. And, just so, the deterrents of good pictures are: smugness, discontent, jealousy, disruptive politics.

So many elements go into picture making that there must exist the best of cooperation to achieve that mysterious "X" that marks the perfect mixture of the recipe.

Radio deserves a lot of credit for the building of its production organization. In January, 1929, Radio Pictures was just an idea. Within two years Radio has not only built up a remarkable morale, kept its wheels going efficiently, but also expanded its plant with an expenditure of $6,000,000.

Joseph I. Schnitzer has had years of experience in what exchanges and theatres want. And this valuable experience rests upon a solid foundation of sterling good judgment and keen enterprise. William Le Baron, besides his production experience, knows authors, plays, books, stories. And Radio, wisely goes in strong for its writer organization.

The ambitious spirit of the place is typified in the announcement for 1931-32. Last year the pretentious pictures were styled Titans. This year this lusty young major company dares to say it will offer all Titans—36 of them!

I gather that the highlights will be:

A mighty effort to rival, even to outdo "Cimarron," putting Richard Dix, Irene Dunne and the entire "Cimarron" cast, director Wesley Ruggles, writer Howard Estabrook into another empire building story based upon the stirring gold rush days of the Black Hills of South Dakota; Dix and Dunne again, in a widely different picture, with Spain as the background, and the story based upon the romantic, best selling song of "Marcheta" by Victor Schertzinger; Dolores Del Rio in "The Dove"; an Ina Claire special; another Ruggles-Estabrook opus based upon the evolution of the modern youth, product of these days of non-restraint and unrest; the Wheeler Woolsey comedy features; sophisticated pictures with Lily Damita and others of the same type, with the individuality and direction of Lowell Sherman; the Rex Beach story pictures.

Radio scored heavily the past year with its famous 300 day and date national campaigns of advertising in the newspapers. This same splendid stimulus will, in all probability, be put back of the outstanding pictures of 1931-32.

Here are the brains and names upon which Radio will rely largely for its new Titanic effort:

Lowell Sherman	Richard Boleslavsky

Radio Will Release 36 Features During '31-32

Radio Pictures will make 36 attractions, each designated as a Titan, during the season of 1931-32, according to an announcement by Joseph I. Schnitzer, president.

This is a departure from previous merchandising by the company which has hitherto adhered to the plan of "breaking down" its productions into various classifications, states Schnitzer. Further, he says that each of the 36 will stand on its merits as a feature attraction.

These productions will be filmed according to a schedule which will enable Schnitzer and William LeBaron, production head, to throw into their making the full benefit of a contract list of directors, authors, stars, featured players and producing and technical staffs.

"Glamor and romance, colorful locale, high adventure, and above all dashing and stirring movie action, in love stories replete with heart interest and emotion, providing vehicles for an impressive array of big stars, are the elements which will rule the production values of a number of Radio Pictures, many of which are to be filmed on a scale approximating grandeur," according to the company announcement.

"Stark realism has been made taboo, in the earnest conviction of Radio's leaders that the public is now swinging back to the world of romance, glamor and illusion.

"Bird of Paradise"

"One of the leading attractions scheduled will be 'Bird of Paradise,' long rated as an important piece of show property. The author-producer of this Hawaiian romance of the stage was Richard Walton Tully. Dolores Del Rio is slated to play the unhappy Luana who cast herself into the flaming volcano in a last mad moment of tribal ecstacy.

Three With Del Rio

"Two more productions are scheduled for Del Rio. One, 'The Dove,' a stage success by Willard Mack and produced by David Belasco, will place the Mexican star in a tale of love and adventure south of the Rio Grande.

"Another will be 'The Last Virtue' by the novelist, I. A. R. Wylie.

Dix-Dunne in Two

"Two productions will bear the starring imprint of the Richard Dix-Irene Dunne combination which met success in 'Cimarron.' These are 'Marcheta' and 'Frontier.' 'Marcheta,' authored by Victor Schertzinger and Louis Stevens, and to be directed by Schertzinger, will bring a romance of Old Spain to the talking screen, wherein Dix will portray the role of a bull fighter in love with Irene Dunne as an alluring senorita.

"'Frontier' will bring the exciting years of Dakota in its days of lawless conquest to the screen, with Dix playing the role of a U. S. Marshall whose guns write finis to the last bad man of the American empire of the West. The pen of Howard Estabrook, which brought Edna Ferber's 'Cimarron' to the screen, is responsible for this tale. Edna May Oliver will again be seen with Dix and Dunne. No director has as yet been announced.

Fannie Hurst's "Symphony"

"Another production, high in the list of Radio Pictures producing ambitions, is 'Symphony of Six Millions,' an original penned by Fannie Hurst. In 'Symphony' Miss Hurst has endeavored to capture the heartaches, laughs, tears and emotions of New York's teeming millions. Director and cast unannounced.

Ina Claire in One

"Ina Claire has been acquired by Radio Pictures for a comedy drama from the pen of John Howard Lawson, 'Folly.' As Jane Dawn, mistress of one of New York's money kings, she will be seen in a struggle with the organized ranks of the Four Hundred wherein she is brought on trial for the one crime that the Smart Set will not tolerate.

Hope Williams in "Penthouse"

"Hope Williams, signed to a five year contract by Radio Pictures, and star of the Arthur Hopkins stage plays, 'Holiday' and 'Rebound,' will make her talking screen debut in 'Penthouse,' the drama of a society girl who loses her father and is left with nothing but a ranch in Wyoming following the Wall Street crash, and finds herself caught in a gripping romance. John Howard Lawson authored this piece. Joel McCrea and Geoffrey Kerr are under consideration for important roles in support of Miss Williams.

Irene Dunne in Three

"Irene Dunne will star in three productions. One of these stories will be 'The Other Passport,' which she is scheduled to make immediately after her work in the MGM Dunne-Menjou story now in production, for which she was loaned by Radio Pictures. Announcements of her other productions for Radio will be made later.

Lowell Sherman Plans

"Two Lowell Sherman vehicles are now under consideration, 'The Divorce Lawyer' and 'The Aristocrat.' These will be produced with important supporting casts.

Lily Damita in Two

"Lily Damita has been assigned two dramatic vehicles, one of these, 'The Woman Between,' authored by Irving Kaye Davis, with adaptation by Howard Estabrook, is being filmed with a supporting cast including Anita Louise, Lester Vail, O. P. Heggie, Miriam Seegar, Lincoln Stedman, Ruth Weston, Blanche Frederici and Halliwell Hobbes. 'The Woman Between' is the drama of a beautiful French manikin who weds an American money king, falls in love with his son, is caught between two fires, and eventually returns to the arms of her husband. Victor Schertzinger is the director. It has been richly mounted and gowned under the art direction of Max Ree.

"Victor Schertzinger contributes his directorial talents to the second of Miss Damita's productions under this schedule. 'The Sphinx Has Spoken,' from the novel by Maurice De Kobra, adaptation and dialogue for which have been done by Jane Murfin. LeBaron is slated to produce this picture personally. It details the drama of an adventuress, the mysterious and beautiful wife of a professional gambler, with whom two officers of the British Indian army fall in love. Geoffrey Kerr has already been cast in support of Miss Damita.

Works of Wesley Ruggles

"Two productions of unusual theme are to be directed by Wesley Ruggles, director of 'Cimarron.' Again associated with him will be Howard Estabrook, screen author of the Dix-Dunne picture.

"The first of these, 'Are These Our Children,' co-authored by Ruggles and Estabrook, is a drama dealing with the causes that lead to the downfall of youth and the betrayal of its hopes. It is the boy and girl of today who are thus dramatized in a love story combining pathos, romance, a touch of humor and grandeur.

"The second, 'Miracle City,' will embrace all the glamor and adventure of youth storming the gates of Hollywood. Both Ruggles and Estabrook have combined to give a true picture of the magic city of the movies in a romance etched against the tinselly background of star dust.

Wheeler and Woolsey in Three

"Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey will have three co-starring productions during this their third season. The first of these, 'Girl Crazy,' is from the current Broadway hit, presented by Aarons and Friedley. The book is by Guy Bolton and John McGowan, the music by George Gershwin, and lyrics by Ira Gershwin. 'Shenanigans' and 'All At Sea' are the titles of the other two Wheeler-Woolsey vehicles in this series. The latter title is tentative.

"In addition to his appearances as co-star with Woolsey in these three vehicles Wheeler will also co-star with Dorothy Lee in 'If I Were Rich,' one of William Anthony McGuire's stage attractions.

New Oliver-Herbert Team

"Radio Pictures has developed a new team of character stars in Edna May Oliver and Hugh Herbert, who will be seen in two productions, as yet untitled. Both have already established their popularity with the public, Oliver with her performance in 'Cimarron' and other pictures, and Hugh Herbert in numerous vehicles. In addition to her co-starring appearance in these two shows, Miss Oliver will also be given an important role in the Dix-Dunne show, 'Frontier,' while Herbert has already enacted an important role in 'Traveling Husbands.'

"'Fannie Foley, Herself' (tentative title) is another Edna May Oliver picture.

Irene Dunne's "Consolation Marriage"

"A late addition to the schedule calls for the starring of Irene Dunne in 'Consolation Marriage' from the pen of Bill Cunningham, with Paul Sloane directing from the screen adaptation by Humphrey Pearson. Myles Connolly is slated to be associate producer.

Front Page Features

"Five dramas with themes packing front page news wallop are to come from Radio Pictures. The first is 'The Slander Girl,' from Rex Beach's Liberty Magazine story, 'The Fourth Offence.' This is the story of a Broadway star who, on the death of her mother, seeks the freedom she has longed for, falls in love with a youngster who eventually confesses he is a convict with three offences against him, and goes to life for a fourth offence. A startling climactic twist cleans up the plot.

"Charles MacArthur, co-author of 'Front Page' and other screen successes, contributes 'One O'clock Girl.' It's the story of a chorus girl wife of a banker, who rebels against humdrum marital existence and becomes engaged in a terrific battle with him over possession of her child, and freedom.

"John Howard Lawson, who is authoring 'Penthouse' for Hope Williams, contributes to this front page column of pro-

56 SHORTS FROM RADIO

Seven Series Included

Fifty-six Short subjects are to be released by Radio Pictures for the season 1931-32.

Included are 24 two reelers to be filmed by Louis Brock and six two reelers by Larry Darmour.

In addition, Amedee Van Beuren is to contribute 13 one reel cartoons and 13 one reel novelties.

Included in the 24 two reelers to be produced by Brock will be six "Headliners"; six Ned Sparks; six Rosco Ates; six Chic Sale's.

"Brock," according to Radio officials, "will enjoy all the facilities of the company's studios in the production of these short features. This will include magnificent sets, rich properties and beautiful gowns. In this way, Brock will achieve production values comparable with those given feature productions.

"Brock will also be able to utilize the services of Radio Pictures' staff men. Such camera experts as Edward Cronjager, who shot 'Cimarron,' brings their services to these short features between feature production activities, as do all of Radio's sound engineers, artists, property specialists, etc.

"Among the directors whom Brock will employ are Mark Sandrich, Lloyd French, Harold Schwartz and others. Maurie Grashin, Scott Darling, Johnny Grey and other well known writers will contribute their services. During the past year Brock states he had used over 50 men in this department to obtain high-class results, although his production was limited for that season to but 12 pictures.

"Brock promises a notable array of stars for his 'Headliner' series. Among the stars whom he anticipates presenting in this list are Clark & McCullough, W. C. Fields, Rae Dooley, Jimmy Savo, and others.

"The first of these is already completed, and Stars Ford Sterling and Lucien Littlefield, under the title 'Trouble from Abroad.'

Ned Sparks Series

"The Ned Sparks series will be of the domestic type. Playing with Sparks throughout the series will be Addie McPhail as his wife, Roberta Gale as the irritating flapper sister-in-law, George McFarlane, Charles Dow Clark and Cecil Cunningham. Sparks' first feature on this program, 'Fish Sometimes Swim,' has been completed. Scott Darling, Mauri Grashin and Mark Sandrich have done the adaptation and dialogue.

"Another Sparks vehicle is 'The Strife of the Party,' the story and adaptation for which were done by Sparks and Sandrich. Sandrich directed this vehicle which was photographed by Nick Musuraca and re-

FOREIGN VERSIONS

Market Abroad Only Scratched

Radio Pictures is reported to be making rapid strides in its foreign version department, with Leon d'Usseau, head of foreign production, at the studios, now completing an assembly of writers, directors and players of the five important languages—French, Spanish, German, Italian and Scandinavian.

"I am now getting this group together, so they will be available instantly to Radio Pictures," he said. "We have barely scratched the foreign versions possibilities. Why, in such cities as New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Pittsburgh, there are many to support foreign pictures of one kind or another.

"There are 21 Spanish speaking countries alone, and millions of people along our Southern border who would prefer Spanish talking pictures.

"I believe the future will show that our increased production value in films for foreign markets, the additional investment for higher standards, better directors, better players, will have a twofold value in returns; an increased income from other countries and the establishment of a splendid market at home.

"'Le roi s'ennuie,' a French version of the stage play 'The Queen's Husband,' opened in New York three months ago and played to successful returns. The same film succeeded in Paris, the interior of France, and French colonies, creating a demand for all that Radio Pictures can produce."

In charge of supervising and directing French versions is Marquis de La Falaise. He is at present engaged in directing "Une Femme Libre," with a cast of French players.

According to present plans all productions that have the French appeal will be translated as fast as they are produced in English.

Associated Talking Pictures Plans

Encouraged by the success of "Escape" and "Perfect Alibi," pictures produced by Basil Dean, director and producer of English films for Radio Pictures' release in America last year, a more ambitious program has been lined up for 1931.

Associated Talking Pictures, Ltd., of London, of which Dean is producer-director, has agreed to produce a series of six films for Radio in 1931. To assist in producing the type of picture in this country, Joseph I. Schnitzer, president of Radio, recently sent a crew of cutters, cameramen and technicians from the Hollywood studios.

H. M. Baker, an English capitalist, is financing the films being produced by Dean. Both men recently visited Radio Pictures studio.

Short subject producer for Radio program

Now that the motion picture has become mechanized through the talkies, sound and engineering branches of the industry have been assuming a greater importance in the sphere of production.

One of the most important single phases of production during the current era of talking pictures is the extent to which technical skill and invention are employed in reproducing the voice.

It is common knowledge that such great engineering institutions as Radio Corporation of America, Western Electric, General Electric Company and Westinghouse Company and others conduct costly research laboratories in the investigation of new possibilities.

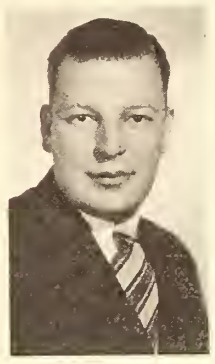
Likewise have the motion picture companies had their experimental laboratories in constant operation as among the most complete and ingenious in any industry.

"The technical branches," according to experts in the Radio experimental laboratory, "are of more than passing interest, because upon them depend the future of sound films in relation to more faithful reproductions of voice articulations and the realistic capturing of confidential tones such as breathing, sighing and whispering, and the elimination of annoying 'frying' noises.

Life of Film Lengthened

"Of vital interest to the patrons and owners of theatres is the attempt to perfect the film itself. In this respect Radio Pictures, when its process it finally applied, will have an important scientific step in the industry. Under a new method of treatment, developing and printing, the studio's laboratory has hit upon a means to prolong the life of film three-fold and to make it more susceptible to photographic images.

Radio's New Laboratory



In order to make this process applicable to its product within the next few months, the studio has launched the construction of a great developing and printing laboratory.

"It is apparent that there must be considerable romance in this constant search for improvements which will reflect themselves in better motion pictures. And there is. In its romantic aspects, technical branches dramatize the most complicated of electrical and mechanical engineering problems into terms of entertainment.

"It isn't merely a matter of chasing electrons, or tracing the electrical flow through resistances, chokes, transformers and tubes and mixing it with voice vibrations to resemble human tonalities. The aim of our sound department is to recreate the subtle phrasings of the voice and make them part and parcel of the dramatic motivation.

"To do this, an electrical engineer must have an inventor's vision, a dramatist's

Building the Announcement Book

In the preparation and production of Radio Pictures' announcement book this year, Hyatt Daab, director-in-chief of advertising, publicity and exploitation, had the assistance of the following artists:

Frederic C. Madan, creator of the Titan, one of the foremost illustrators of the day; Rico Tomaso, whose work appears regularly in Cosmopolitan, Saturday Evening Post, Ladies Home Journal, etc.; Dan Content, another famous Satevepost illustrator; Armando, one of America's leading color designers and caricaturists and a colleague of Covarrubias; Armand Seguso, outstanding among poster artists; Russell Patterson, creator of the Patterson Girl, comic strip artist, and protege of William Randolph Hearst; Frank Bensing, noted poster creator; William Hoople, whose color plates and black and whtes have graced fiction in Satepost and Cosmopolitan, and Ty Mahon, America's great girl artist.

From the advertising and publicity department art staff, David L. Strumpff supervised all art work under the direction of Daab. Gene Widhoff, creative artist, on the Home Office staff, contributed atmospheric work. Lettering was under the supervision of Morris Meyer and Leo Quanchi, of the RKO staff.

Extensive National Ad Drives Planned by RKO

With the industry keyed to the value of straightforward, dynamic and informative publicity, Radio Pictures, according to its executives, has made extensive plans for service in this field during the coming season.

"In Hollywood, the studio publicity staff under Don Eddy, has been greatly enlarged," the company statement said, "with newspaper men predominating and following all developments with the speed and accuracy of a news wire service. Reporters are now assigned to every company. A greatly enlarged portrait and still organization operating under the jurisdiction of Ernest A. Bachrach cooperates swiftly in supplying portraits and news shots of timely value to the publicity department for overnight distribution throughout the country.

"A special mat and feature service has been developed to cover the press not only of America, but the entire foreign field. National motion picture magazines are being served with exclusive picture and feature service on a scale of exceptional magnitude. And motion picture editors of daily, weekly and monthly circulation are now on a mailing service list which operates with clock like regularity.

"From the New York home office, an exceptionally large list of newspapers and wired services are to be contacted, as now, with news and picture service designed to blanket the nation and foreign countries.

"During the year past Radio Pictures has cooperated with exhibitors and the press in a series of national publicity campaigns. Thousands of stills, mats, scores of feature articles were distributed in the advance campaigns ushering in the Amos 'n' Andy attraction, 'Check and Double Check' and 'Cimarron.' The year to come will see these efforts enlarged for Radio Pictures is not restricting the number of its Titans as in previous years and anticipates a series of campaigns of this type, keyed to these releases, and commensurate with their importance.

"Radio Pictures' policy is to deal honestly and straight-forwardly with all news editors in all publicity issues. Exaggeration is taboo in its announcements. Facts are all carefully authenticated. The welfare of the industry as a whole is borne in mind, as well as that of the company's product in the zeal with which announcements are guarded. This policy has resulted in an attitude of marked friendliness and faith on the part of editors throughout the country for news announcements emanating from this company.

"With press publicity closely coordinated to broadcasting and national tieups, Radio Pictures publicity is organized for the season of 1931-'32 to do full justice to its coming product.

Radio to Offer 56 Short Films

corded by Phil Faulkner, with art direction by Max Ree.

Rosco Ates Series

"Such outstanding two reel comedy artists as Ed Kennedy, Jimmy Finlayson, Bud Jamieson, Charles Hall, Monte Collins, Phil Dunham, and others are promised by Brock as support in the Rosco Ates series. The action in these comedies is to be of a fast order, with plenty of hokum. In the cast of 'A Clean-up on the Curb,' already completed, Ates is supported by Vivian Oakland, Kay Deslys, Stan Blystone, Jimmy Finlayson and Ed Kennedy. Mauri Grashin, Harold Schwartz and Lloyd French did the story and dialogue. Direction by Lloyd French, with photography by Leo Tover.

Chic Sale Series

"Chic Sale's brand of humor will be utilized in a series by Brock. Chic will do his Lem Putt character in these comedies, supported by an outstanding list of character stars.

"One of these Chic Sale comedies, 'The County Seat,' has been completed. It was directed by Mark Sandrich with story and dialogue by Ben Holmes and Sandrich. In the cast supporting Sale are Bud Jamieson, George McFarlane, Charles Dow Clark, Aileen Carlyle, Billy Engle and Florence Enright.

Six From Darmour

"Encouraged by the increasing popularity of 'kid pictures,' as attested by 'Skippy,' Larry Darmour will make another series of six Mickey 'Himself' McGuire comedies, based on the Fontaine Fox cartoons. Albert Herman, who directed all previous 'Mickey' comedies, will wield the megaphone.

Van Beuren Novelties

"Not the least in importance in the Radio Pictures short subjects release will be a series of 13 one reel cartoons and 13 one reel novelties from Amedee Van Beuren. Both of these subjects will strike into new and novel fields of entertainment and will be backed by Radio Pictures showmanship to a high degree."

tive instinct and a practical working wledge of his media.

e "Beam" Microphone

For instance, under the direction of Carl eher the studio has developed a 'beam' rophone or concentrator which makes it sible to pickup voices at great distances. is instrument, which is focussed on the nd to be heard, was given its most prac- al demonstration during the filming of marron.'

Aimed directaly at the gigantic land rush ich features the opening of the picture, 'beam' microphone made it possible to k up the beat of horses' hoofs, the creak- of wagons and the thunderous hub-bub. The 'beam' microphone was the product the research laboratories, and so, in fact, is the 'ribbon' microphone which com- nes the concentration of the 'beam' with e added advantage of being a more inti- ate and sensitive instrument.

In its present state of development the bbon' microphone reduces the annoyance camera noises and permits the unit sound corders to suspend the microphone from ve to 10 feet farther away.

"Mobile recording equipment has also been fined. Amplifiers have been reduced in eight from 150 pounds to less than 25 ounds, permitting greater portability. In his change none of the characteristics of he heavier amplifier were lost.

No More "Ground" Noise

"The latest, and perhaps the most im- portant invention, so far as its possibilities are concerned, is the 'ground noise elimi- nator' devised by one of Dreher's assist- ants—Hugh McDowell.

"McDowell's eliminator does away with the 'frying' and 'sizzling' noises so annoying to theatre audiences. As a result of it, the screen takes on a new sense of intimacy and make possible the faithful reproduction of all sounds audible to the ear.

"The first practical demonstration of the silencing device—it eliminates 98 per cent of the basic noises common in film—was employed in the filming of 'The Woman Between.' Because of its whispers and con- fidential voice inflections—long impossible of reproduction—are recorded with unpre- cedented fidelity and effect.

"'Ground noise' is not a legitimate sound produced in filming. Rather, it is created in projection by invisible dirt and scratches which show through the clear section of the sound track and which interrupt the beam of light reaching the photo-electric cell of the projector.

"Since sound reproduction is based on the passage of light through wavy black and white masses, it is evident that any foreign matter that creeps into the path of the track must inevitably be translated into terms of sounds.

Clearing the Sound Track

"A sound track is divided into two sec- tions—black and white. The clear portion is the one that causes the trouble since it is through this segment that light is impressed. As this clear strip of trouble-producing sur- face is continuous throughout the length of the picture, the ground noises were long considered impossible of elimination.

"McDowell, however, working in the studio's laboratory, tackled the problem by cutting out 98 per cent of the offending strip and making it sensitive to the passage of light only when voices were being re- corded.

"The 'noise eliminator' is automatic in operation. It consists of an electro-magnetic shutter which is influenced by the volume of sound vibrations. Situated where it inter- rupts the passage of light which impresses the voice image onto the film track, the shutter bobs back and forth through the influence of a magnet.

"When sound vibrations occur, the shutter opens. When silence reigns, the light aperture is automatically closed, thus elimi- nating the constant flow of light which reached the film in previous recording systems.

"In simpler terms, it does away with the troublesome clear space and makes it opaque; that is, impervious to light so that dirt and scratches may not reproduce.

New Sound Truck

"Another important development of Dreher's department is a new sound truck which can follow a motion picture company to any location spot, regardless of the rough- ness of terrain. The truck is light and of the semi-tractor type which can make fair progress over ploughed fields and rocky desert stretches.

Developing Printing Plant

"Under the direction of Frank E. Garbutt, who has designed many film laboratories in Hollywood, Radio Pictures is constructing a modern fireproof printing and developing plant adjacent to the studio.

"The plant will augment the studio's present production facilities by giving it 12- hour service in the finishing of its film.

"Many new and radically different meth- ods are to be employed in developing and printing—all insuring longer life and greater clarity. These will include a triple inspec- tion process to guarantee near perfection in the finished product before it is released for distribution; another is a secret chemical process which will give longer life to the film itself.

Mobile Camera

"In the electrical shop—which is very much of an experimental laboratory—Wil- liam Johnson, the chief, has perfected a moble camera perambulator which rises thirty feet into the air and makes possible photography from great heights.

"The perambulator, as with the 'beam' microphone, was first used on location with the 'Cimarron' company. Because of it, many unusual 'shots' were made of the land rush that would have been impossible with the older forms of parallels and low- perambulators."

ductions in 'Every Girl' and 'Love a La Carte,' (both titles tentative).

"'Love Affair,' written by Melville Baker in collaboration with William Jutte, depicts the drama of two mutual friends whose marriages hit the rocks. Both go on a tear, have an affair to- gether, then go their separate ways. Their reckless paths lead to the verge of ruin, but when the crash comes, it is love reawakened that points the way to a saner and happier life.

Inside on "Traveling Husbands"

"What does hubby do when he hits the road and leaves the wife at home? Radio Pictures has endeavored to give a discreet peek at the erring benedict in 'Traveling Husbands' wherein Evelyn Brent, Hugh Herbert and Constance Cummings are directed by Paul Sloane. Other featured players are Frank Albert- son, Carl Miller, Spencer Charters, Frank McHugh, Purnell Pratt, Mae Clarke, Rita LaRoy, Gwen Lee, Lucille Williams, Tom Francis, Stanley Fields and William Duff. The story was writ- ten and adapted by Humphrey Pearson, and produced by Myles Connolly.

Wheeler in "Too Many Cooks"

"Adapted from one of Broadway's stage successes by Frank Craven, and di- rected by William Seiter, 'Too Many Cooks' will come to the screen with a cast headed by Bert Wheeler, Dorothy Lee and Roscoe Ates. Other featured players are Florence Roberts, Hall Coo- ley, Sharon Lynn, Robert McWade, Clif- ford Dempsey, and George Chandler. Adaptation is by Jane Murfin with Douglas MacClean producing.

"Should Wives Work?"

"Al Boasberg, humorist with numerous screen successes to his credit, has au- thored 'Should Wives Work?' and An- thony Veiller is adapting it to the screen. William LeBaron is making a search for beautiful stars and accomplished featured players for the picture.

Threnody of Thrillers

"Three melodramatic dramas, all origi- nals and written by well known authors, will bring the contemporary thrills of New York, Chicago and Paris to the screen.

"The first of these, 'Glamour,' was written by Louis Weitzenkorn, author of 'Five Star Final,' newspaper thriller pro- duced by Al Woods. 'Glamour' is a drama of New York and Parisian life. It details the career of a Parisian girl, who is transformed into a bogus count by a scheming American newspaper man, becomes entangled with New York racketeers and causes a veritable gang upheaval. Lily Damita may be cast for the leading role.

"'The Chicago Dove,' written by James Whittaker, newspaper man and author, is an original. It will be directed by George Archainbaud, with Ricardo Cortez announced for one of the leading roles, and Irene Dunne under considera- tion for the feminine lead.

"The author of 'Haunch, Paunch and Jowl,' and other novels, Samuel Ornitz, has collaborated with Lester Cohen to write 'Exposed.' The story comes on the heels of New York's expose of girls 'framed' by corrupt officials and sent up for crimes of which they are innocent.

"Ricardo Cortez is also slated to do 'Dance, Gigolo, Dance.' And there will be a second Rex Beach story, as yet un- titled."

Ottawa—When "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" played B. F. Keith's theatre, Ot- tawa, the members of the House of Com- mons agreed to an early adjournment so that the Parliamentarians should witness a performance. The reason was that the author of the popular stage and screen piece is Charles W. Bell, member of the Canadian Parliament from Hamilton, Ontario. Incidentally, Bell is being groomed for a cabinet post.

Negro Projectionist Dies From Burns in Film Blaze

St. Louis—William Gibson, 25-year- old negro projectionist at the Palace the- atre, sacrificed his life to protect his audience when a film caught fire. About 120 men, women and children were in the theatre when a strip of the film broke and ignited. Gibson told his helper, Timothy Moman, also a negro, to jump from the projection room to call aid, then proceeded to fight the fire alone. A few minutes later Gibson leaped from the booth with his clothing in flames, ignited when he tried to extricate a piece of the burning film from the projector. He was rushed to City Hospital, where he died early the next morning.

When smoke filled the theatre, a cry of "Fire!" caused part of the audience to run out, but the rest were quieted by Charles McCrow, negro janitor, and all got out safely. The Palace Theatre is operated by Julius A. Sanowski. Damage is estimated at $1,000.

Ralph Block and Fox Split

Hollywood—"I've always wanted a lengthy vacation at the expense of some one else, and now I'm going to have it," declared Ralph Block as he departed from the Fox lot after adjusting the salary angle of his mutually terminated contract with Winfield Sheehan's studo.

Block joined Fox several months ago as associate producer and was later switched to the scenario staff, where, it is said, a disagreement arose with studio officials.

Covering the day's receipts with her hands she said, "You haven't got the nerve to shoot. Git, big boy." And he did. Capture came later.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Madison, Wis.

DEAR HERALD:

Let's be reasonable. Every day we hear people say, "This is the worst panic this country has ever known." People who talk that way are of short memory or are not familiar with the history of this country.

We can faintly recall the depression that hit the country following the Civil War and during the reconstruction period. We remember the panic of 1873 when the failure of Jay Cooke & Company brought on a panic and banks and brokerage houses went to the wall and the stock exchange was padlocked for 10 days and the whole country went practically bankrupt. Then again in 1907 when the failure of the Knickerbocker Trust Company brought on the panic of that year. People of today fail to remember that terrible "Black Friday" on September 24, 1869, when business was paralyzed and bankruptcy stalked like a black specter throughout the land.

But few, if any, are left who remember the days of the "Wildcat Money" when a five-dollar bill would be good if you could get to the bank that issued it before it failed, but in those days transportation was so slow that few notes were redeemed.

We can remember when our father shipped dressed hogs to Chicago and got $3.50 per 100 for them. We can remember when corn sold in Nebraska for 9 cents per bushel, when $1.25 per day was considered good wages.

In times of abnormal prosperity we are apt to believe that depression will never again come. When corn was selling for $2.00 a bushel after the World War we heard farmers in our town say that the time never would come when corn would sell for less than $1, and yet it sold for 35 cents within three months. WHAT GOES UP MUST COME DOWN is just as true today as when that phrase was coined, and it's the coming down that gives us the cold shivers and causes us to say, that it is the coldest winter in history.

Were it not for the gambling instinct that is inherent in the human race there wouldn't be any panics. We wouldn't sell "short" nor buy "long." We wouldn't pay $300 per acre for land worth only $1.25 in hopes we could sell it for more. Were it not for the gambling instinct within us there would have been no Wall Street smash a year ago last fall. It's the gamblers who bring on panics and it's cool-headed legitimate business that brings the ship of state through the troubled waters of depression. There is no such thing as a panic today except in the distorted minds of the people. There is a slight depression, it is true, but we should keep in mind that expression that was so aptly said that, in the dark soil of depression is germinated the flowers of prosperity, and we should forget about panics and remember that prosperity is just around the corner.

—And Does It Fizz!

We never think of going to Iowa without planning a visit with Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Hunerberg of the Princess theatre at Parkersburg, and we never visit them but what we stay longer than we intended. No matter how long we stay, it always seems too short. We stayed two hours with them the other day and it seemed like 15 minutes, that's because they are good entertainers and because C. V. knows just how to make it so it will fizz.

C. V. says the main trouble with this business is that it takes all the profit he makes on the good pictures to pay the losses on the poor ones. We suggested to him that since he couldn't play more good ones he should play fewer poor ones. He said it was a good suggestion.

"THE DOORWAY TO HELL." This title will most likely chase a lot of them out of town. It's another gangster picture that will please if you can get 'em in and it ranks well up with "THE CRIMINAL CODE," "LITTLE CAESAR," "THE SECRET SIX" and "THE LAST PARADE," and this one makes one more gangster picture, which is aplenty, if you ask us.

—And Maybe Not

It was our intention to have had a game of golf last Sunday at Manchester with W. A. Dutton of the Plaza theatre, but a cold Northwest wind came down from Crocket Brown's town of Nashwauk, Minn., and put a stop to any thoughts of golf. You can expect anything at any time from a town with that kind of a name. W. A. was all set to give us a neat trimmin', but that cold wave saved him the biggest surprise of his life—maybe.

Last night we had the nightmare and had to walk back. Tonight we are going to take a buggy and harness to bed with us.

When we got to Darlington we learned that our very good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Grimm, had sold their theatre and retired temporarily from the business, but that didn't prevent us from spending a very enjoyable evening with them at their home. Our prediction is that they will be back in the business somewhere before very long. When it once gets in their blood they can't stay out.

Seeing Red!

The guy who layed out this town of Madison was crazier than the one who layed out Indianapolis. You start at Capitol Square and go in any direction and you come right back to the Square where you started. On one corner there is a signal light where the green shows for North and South and East and West at the same time, and it's the same with the red. You go when you please and if you hit anybody you talk 'em out of it if you can.

We drove around that corner 11 times trying to find our hotel and missed the traffic every time around and finally a cop stopped us and said, "Say, haven't you got any breaks on that car?" And we replied, "No, sir, we never use breaks; where's the Park hotel?"

Madison is the capital of this Badger state and the legislature is in session and has been since the snow drifts thawed so the boys could get in town and they are not expecting to adjourn before July. Out in Nebraska our legislature can only draw pay for 90 days and as soon as the pay stops the legislature stops, but these Badgers up here are just like all other politicians. When they can grab hold of the public teat they just shut their eyes and hang on. But Wisconsin is a pretty durn good state at that.

When we went to pay our hotel bill this morning the clerk soaked us $2. We said to him, "Say, who won the ball game last night?" and he replied, "What's the matter with you? Are you crazy?" And we answered him, "Why, we supposed there was a ball game, for we found a pitcher and a catcher up in our room." That guy was working on that when we left and we'll betcha it hasn't soaked in yet.

Ultimate in Theatres

If you want to meet up with a surprise in the theatre business you want to go to Platteville and see the Avalon theatre, owned and managed by W. C. Tracy. Then, after you have recovered and if you think you can stand another shock, drive over to Edgerton and see the Rialto theatre owned and managed by P. W. Palmer, and then if you don't say that both of these theatres are far beyond your expectations then you have had your expectations altogether too high. There is no sense in any town in the world having better theatres than these two, and there is no sense in any town expecting to find any better managers. They don't make 'em, and there hain't no such animule. Of course, we expect T. F. Lee of the Opera House at Shulsburg to take exceptions to this statement, but what else could one expect from an Irish Democrat who puts sand in his doughnuts instead of sugar. You know T. F. is a baker, too, and sand is cheap around Shulsburg.

Wisconsin's road slogan is "IT IS HARDER TO LOSE YOUR WAY IN WISCONSIN THAN IT IS TO FIND IT IN OTHER STATES," and we know of but one other slogan that comes nearer to being the truth, and that is "THE HERALD COVERS THE FIELD LIKE AN APRIL SHOWER."

Claim Better Developing

Hollywood — Absolute elimination of variation in the light qualities of prints is expected by engineers from a developing process reported at M-G-M. The process has been conceived to do away with changes in hypo solutions during the developing of the prints necessary from a single negative. The new system revolves around the restoration of the original hypo solution by withdrawing through an electrical process, the silver nitrate precipitate. The process, it is claimed, will also thus permit the reclamation of the silver nitrate more economically. The first productions developed by the new process are "Five and Ten," "The Squawman," and "A Free Soul."

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

PLANNING AHEAD OF TIME

THIS chat is intended primarily as a gentle reminder and not as a criticism and it deals with the advisability of planning your activities far enough in advance rather than waiting for the last moment and then trying to put something over in a rush.

Why not analyze your own methods first. How do you go about working out the details for your future plans? Do you make it a practice to compare your bookings with special holidays or attempt to fit certain pictures according to some particular local event?

At a great deal of effort and expense the Club pages carry from week to week an advance reminder on holidays, historic dates, special commercial weeks, etc. Careful reference to the Showman's Calendar will tip you off four to six weeks ahead of such dates. That is when you should be starting your plans.

Dozens of managers have told us about campaigns which they engineered at the last moment, and they were sincere in believing that those campaigns were quite successful. Well, they probably were, but certainly not as successful as they would have been had they worked them out well in advance with sufficient time to tie-up additional angles.

Another point which calls for planning well in advance is the make-up of your show. The days of booking any kind of a feature, throwing in any kind of an assortment of shorts, adding a newsreel and calling it a show, are over with.

Smart showmen, these days, select the feature with care, especially paying attention to the days it will be used for exhibition. It is a well known fact that certain pictures click best on particular days of the week. This does not apply where a house maintains a policy of one change a week.

After the feature has been selected and you know just what type story it is, you must next build up your surrounding program with a definite view of making the entire show well balanced and good entertainment. This you can only do by selecting each subject with care.

If, of necessity, you must run a feature of questionable audience appeal, play safe by surrounding it with unusually strong shorts. Make a play for a "name" short, there are plenty available and will give you additional sales angles for your advertising, etc.

* * * *

Planning your campaign need not be construed to mean that you must fire the first shot so far in advance that it is apt to grow stale before the attraction plays the house. If your plans are laid in advance all you need do is wait for the time to start it rolling. Then, with everything ready, every possible angle covered and little or no chance for a slip up, you can feel reasonably certain that your efforts will be rewarded by good business at the box office.

In planning any campaign, whether it be an ordinary advertising layout or an elaborate exploitation and publicity affair, it is well to keep in mind that you must create interest, build that interest up to a point where the theatre-goers will be looking forward to the attraction, and then, "shoot the works" for a grand finale.

You would hardly take any ordinary picture and start its advance advertising off with three times your usual space. Unless you could keep up that amount of space or more it would lose most of the importance you are trying to attach to it long before the opening day. Build up from the bottom, not down from the top.

All accessories, printed matter, signs, lobby displays, etc., etc., ought to be planned ahead of time so that these items are in the theatre and ready for use when needed. There are altogether too many managers who seem to get a kick out of last minute rushing and then pay themselves sweet compliments because they were able to rush everybody else for material needed. Such a practice invariably irritates the people you do business with and generally they make you foot the bills with extra charges on rush work.

If your advertising is expected to be out of the ordinary, why not try preparing your ads far enough in advance so that the press can furnish you with proofs. This will afford you the much needed opportunity of looking them over before they make their appearance in the paper.

* * * *

All of the foregoing will definitely affect your own peace of mind and give you time for your other work and responsibilities. You can hardly expect to be able to keep an eye on other matters while perspiring over a phone or pulling your hair out because the printer was not able to deliver an important herald or circular on six hours notice.

Careful planning, far enough ahead of time, will permit more sensible planning and far more successfully engineered campaigns. You minimize the chances for failure and prove to your superiors that you are an executive as well as a showman.

Summing up this entire discussion, we are urging every member and follower of the Club pages to try to inject a certain amount of system into their methods. Putting off important tasks until the last moment will never bring about well-run theatres or sensibly planned campaigns.

Hardy Landed Free Publicity By Tying Up Local Merchants

That he is in good with his local neighborhood is shown pretty conclusively by the fact that J. B. Hardy, formerly manager of the Blenheim Theatre in New York City, can generally interest both public and merchants on stunts that he wants to engineer in order to put his shows across to ace results.

Hardy recently decided to use the old paper bag gag, but this time, instead of imprinting just the program of his theatre on the bags and have the various local merchants distribute them, he showed the merchants how they could also plug the stores by imprinting their own ad under the theatre's plug. The merchants were more than pleased with the idea.

And so each week, Hardy imprints these paper bags at a small cost per thousand. Twenty thousand bags are distributed weekly, going direct into the homes where they are sure to be seen, and later on no doubt result in business for the house.

Co-Operative Ad Used By Carlson For Film Aided Box-Office Biz

Through the co-operation of his local newspaper, it became possible for Gus Carlson, manager of the Peoples Theatre in Superior, Wis., to turn out a corking campaign for "Abraham Lincoln" that resulted in loads of publicity for the house and a marked increase in attendance.

During the showing of the film, the paper ran three-column ads plugging a special student's ticket. A coupon, printed in the paper, when clipped out and presented at the box-office of the theatre, allowed the special rate. The newspaper—as another stunt—also invited all Civil War Veterans to witness the film. This move was productive of quite a few write-ups for Carlson and the theatre.

A stunt that created quite a bit of comment was that of running a full-page co-operative ad in the local newspaper, to which was also included an essay contest and a cut-up puzzle. Readers of the paper were invited to piece together the broken photo of Lincoln and also submit essays. Efforts were especially made to interest school students, and to this end Carlson announced that to the class having the largest representation of winners a grand award—a large and expensive photo of "Abraham Lincoln"—would be presented. Many children took part, endeavoring to secure some of the beautiful prizes donated by the merchants participating. We are showing a copy of the full-page ad, should you care to use it.

Two window cards, with school student coupon attached to the bottom, were tacked on the bulletin boards in every school in the city. The teachers called the students' attention to the special rate.

In front of the box-office Carlson had a novel attraction in the form of an original theatre program for the performance which Lincoln was attending at the time he was assassinated. This was loaned to Carlson by a friend, and it attracted a lot of comment.

Being diligent readers of the town's papers, the residents of Superior didn't miss seeing the glowing editorial given the picture. Once having learned that the editor of the sheet approved of the film, the theatregoers were more than ever set in their determination to see the picture. They did. And Carlson's house profited. Right, Gus?

Program Readers!

Theatres with mailing lists should find these program chats between manager and patron of great value. We selected this on at random from the latest batch of programs to reach Club headquarters and would like more from Harry L. Newman.

Publicity

To keep our patrons always informed of the good things coming to the Granada is one of our most ardent duties. We have found that in executing this work our policy of "nothing but the truth" has paid us. We are building our business upon "repeat orders." We expect you to see each change of program or as many as possible and if we deceived you with our publicity you would not return again. Ever mindful that all you ask is the bare facts be given you, we feel directly responsible for this important feature of our business.

Straight Talk

Many of our patrons know it to be a positive fact that when they ask me personally as to the quality of a show that I do not hesitate to say it is good, great, ordinary, or poor, just as the case may be. The same things apply to any items in my advertisements appearing over my name. If I personally urge your attendance to see some particular attraction that is the one you should not miss, the invitation should be heeded. Another thing—are you in doubt sometimes as to whether one of the pictures is worth while? If so, go to your phone, call up this theatre, Patchogue 620, and ask how the show is. Any one of our employees will give you dependable information. They are instructed to answer candidly and truthfully. Isn't this decidedly fair? Try it out.

Sincerely,
HARRY L. NEWMAN.

Advertising Hints For Small Houses!

Don't crowd too much copy into small ads.

Inject novelty by changing the appearance of your ads every day.

Use rules to create neat and effective boxes to separate different attractions.

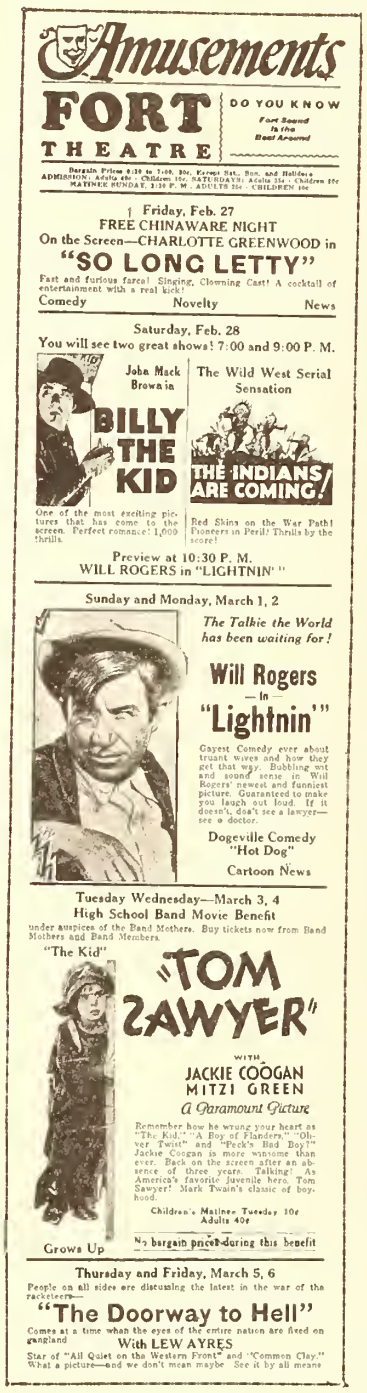
Regardless of the amount of space used, try to make use of small mats or a portion of them. It will give your ads a better appearance.

Emphasize the title or star's name according to value to your house. Don't use the same sized type all the time.

Get acquainted with the various styles and sizes of type at your newspaper's composing room. On request they will make up a galley or two showing their entire stock. You can then make your own selections.

Avoid reference to "sex" in your ads. Invariably it reacts against you and the theatre from the better element in your community.

A small, but well laid out ad, is far better than a large sloppy looking affair. If space is reasonable don't waste it.



Try to convince your paper that scene mats are more valuable if used on a page other than where the ad appears.

Follow the various advertising layouts published on the Club pages every week. You'll find many unusual slants that can be injected into your own advertising.

Send tear sheets from your local papers to Club headquarters every week for possible use of our theatre ad page.

Take a Look at This Weekly Ad Run by I. Craite In Newspaper

Recently we published a page of ads culled from newspapers of small towns through the United Sta This page, as a result, has c ated lots of comment fr showmen located in sm towns. These showmen ha sent us in many ads showing how they sell their shows. A so we present an ad that was used in the weekly paper publish in Fort Atkinson, Wis. The layout is the work of I. J. Crai manager of the Fort Theat

Craite has long ago learn the value of selling the town a way that they will like a understand. As a consequen his copy contains a punch th will put the show over for hi

And the shorts? Here's angle that he more than b lieves in. Like many oth showmen, he too has seen t value of plugging shorts, n because he personally thin they are good, but because tim and again the shorts ha proven box-office builders f him. They have boosted u many a weak feature.

But to get back to the ad i self. Now it's not necessaril required of Craite that he tak lots of care in his newspape layouts. He does it because h wants to show the town tha they have not only a theatre but a showman of whom to b proud. The editors of the loca paper are always willing to co-operate with Craite in his ad-vertising, and they, too, are very proud of the work turned out.

Handicapped—as are many other showmen in towns of 5,000— by the lack of proper facilities, and, at times, lack of special mats and cuts, Craite, nevertheless, manages to turn out something that sells. Take a close look at the ad, and you'll notice the special features that the theatre offers in a Chinaware Night, and other features. On some nights he gives bargain prices, and these nights have proven one of the strongest mediums for getting and holding good-will.

At this time, we'd like to state that if you've any special layouts that you use in your weekly paper, pass them along to us, so that we can look them over. Thanks, "I. J.," for letting us see your work. The Club will depend upon you to keep your fellow members posted on show business out in Fort Atkinson.

Quint Featured Laff Ballyhoo That Gave Film An Ace Break

Quite some laughs were heard not so long ago in Belfast, Maine, as a result of a novel street ballyhoo that Marshall E. Quint, manager of the local Colonial Theatre used to plug the showing of "Charlie's Aunt."

A man was hired to dress in costume representative of the worn by the woman in the picture. He walked about town carrying a satchel on which was labeled selling copy plugging the film. Smoking a pipe and talking to himself as he walked about, the man attracted plenty of attention that later resulted in dollars for the box-office.

Out front of the theatre was placed a barrel. (And here was another that clicked.) On the barrel, Quint painted the words: "Charley's Aunt—A Barrel of Fun." Persons passing by the theatre stopped to look at it, and they made a note to the effect that they wanted to see the film that evening. Which was what Quint desired. His campaign for the picture clicked to fine results. Incidentally we'd like to say a word about his heralds. Whenever possible, he takes a local deal in on the stunt, and on back of the heralds prints the dealer's ad. In this manner he manages to get the heralds at a very small cost, and at the same time, secure for himself the good-will of the dealer as well as the distribution of some of the heralds from the merchant's establishment.

Amos Puts Over A Good Lobby Display; Also Limerick Gag

A striking and unique lobby display in connection with the showing of "East Lynne" was recently conceived by Charles Amos, manager of the Publix-Paramount, Nashville, Tenn.

Ten days in advance a large painting of Ann Harding was sed in the foyer on the main floor. This painting was 12 feet all and 6 feet wide. The figure was taken from the 24-sheet nd retouched with air brush, then mounted on a purple velour ackground enclosed in a gold frame.

Another striking display was the posters in the lobby. These were made up in the form of a large Cameo and suspended in front of a purple background by a black ribbon. The cameo part of the display is made up of four layers of beaverboard. The gold frame part of the cameo was made by mounting gold metallic paper on beaverboard and using a sharp steel tool to "engrave" the gold. It was found that by using pressure on this a deep impression could be made without cutting the paper.

Amos also secured valuable newspaper co-operation through a limerick contest with "Body and Soul."

The limerick contest was run in the newspaper three days in advance of picture's opening. Each limerick with the last line missing contained some message about the picture, together with a photo of one of the two players.

Although there was nothing unusual about the contest, it served definite purposes. One was to further align the theatre with the newspaper; to play up Miss Landi as a new screen find and to advertise the picture.

Over 500 answers were received—thus attesting to the popularity of the contest.

The above are two excellent examples of display and publicity, and where the painting and cameo are concerned we must congratulate Charley Amos for having such art facilities at his command. As to the limerick contest, we agree with Charles that efforts along these lines serve to further good relations between theatre and local newspaper. Let us hear from you again soon, Charley.

Co-Operative Page Was A Highlight Of F. Burns Campaign

In addition to his work on "Cimarron," Frank Burns, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Salisbury, S. C., managed to also put over a co-operative page to advertise the film. Ten merchants co-operated in paying a pro-rata share of the cost of the page; each merchant taking the same amount of space to advertise their respective commodities or merchandise as the case might be.

Across the top of the page appeared in large bold face type, "50 people can win tickets to Capitol Theatre to see Richard Dix in the sensational picture, "CIMARRON'." And then followed the rules to win one of the guest tickets. All a contestant had to do was to visit the windows of the merchants whose ads appeared on the co-operative page. In each window was found one letter of the name, "Cimarron." To the first 50 persons locating these letters and filling out the coupon (on co-operative page) and delivering same to the Capitol Theatre office won the guest tickets.

The co-operative page contest caused a lot of talk in addition to those actually participating in the contest.

Keeping Seats In Repair!

The seats of a theatre are, perhaps, one of the items requiring constant attention due to broken parts and ripped leather. Some houses well remember, or may still have to contend with, hoodlums who from sheer delight plus a destructive nature will rip the leather on a theatre seat.

Aside from the annoyance to other patrons there is always the danger of lawsuits and damages from these causes. So it should behoove all of you to make certain—in-between regular visits of the seat repair men—that these conditions do not reach large proportions.

Repair patches or extra chair seats should always be kept on hand and it is then only a matter of a few moments for one of your staff to change or fix a ripped seat. Even in smaller houses we have found several dozen extra seats that purpose.

Re-covering can then be done by your janitor or porter with leather that should match the chair upholstery. Keep a supply of this stuff on hand all the time and see that your seat covering is always in tip-top shape. It will save you plenty of kicks, and besides, it is real economy when handled right.

The Big-Hearted Boss!

By Plugging Shorts, Schatten Obtains A Kid Business Boost

Plugging his short subjects whenever possible has been productive of some fine publicity and excellent kiddie business for Murray Schatten, manager of the Majestic Theatre in New York City.

When he started the first episode of "Fingerprints," a serial, he inaugurated a Majestic Theatre Fingerprint Club, meeting at the theatre every Saturday matinee, and gave out cards to the kids. These cards, printed in black and white, were spaced off so as to contain a fingerprint in each space. As the kids entered the theatre, they were fingerprinted. The completed card, nine prints and an extra space, entitled the youngsters to witness the last episode of the picture free of charge.

The stunt went over like wildfire with the kids. They flocked to the house to be "fingerprinted" and take advantage of the special offer. This type of work is nothing unusual for Schatten. He tries hard to keep his kid business up to tap, and many are the ideas and slants he uses in order that he can secure the desired publicity and additional business.

Rosson Plugs Serials By Means Of Club; Stunt Goes Over Well

A unique angle in the formation of his kiddie klubs has been added by C. B. Rosson, manager of the Victory Theatre in Salisbury, S. C., to help him plug a serial "Fingerprints." This club is sponsored by R. L. Rankin, the Chief of Police and is known as the Chief Rankin Finger Prints Club.

The front side of a member's club card has a space for his name, school, grade and his finger print. At the bottom are numbers from 1 to 10, inclusive. Every time one of the boys attend a Friday or a Saturday matinee, one of these numbers are punched. When all ten are punched, the youngster is entitled to attend the next matinee as the guest of the theatre. On the reverse side of the membership card are the rules and regulations of the Club:

TO BE A MEMBER IN GOOD STANDING YOU MUST—attend faithfully to your school duties.

obey your mother in everything.
try to do a good turn for someone daily.
when leaving school look twice before crossing street.
do not skate in the streets.
obey the traffic cops.
do not hold on to cars while riding bicycles.
do not run out from behind autos.
look out for yourself and in doing so you may save your life.

This is Mr. Rosson's initial contribution to the Club pages. and we hope that we will hear from him again real soon. especially since he is so active in the building up of his kiddie business—an activity always of interest to the Club members. How about it, "C. B.?" Drop us a line soon and include your photo.

CREAMER'S FINE AD

Lucky is the showman who can boast of a local newspaper working as well as the press boys in Creamer's town, Muscatine, Ia. This ad is ample testimony of how Johnny's ads look when a "regular" composing room gets finished with them. And incidently, don't overlook the fine job John made out of creating this ad. It would be a credit to any theatre regardless of the city in which it is located. Send us more, Creamer, we like them.

Miller, Plugging His Stage Shows, Gave An Invite to Postmen

Through the courtesy of Arthur M. Miller, Fox Wesco manager for San Jose, Cal., all of the letter carriers in the town were invited to witness the show at the California Theatre as guests of the West Coast organization.

Miller's idea in inviting the letter carriers was because of the fact that a Fanchon & Marco stage show, "Love Letters Idea," was current at the theatre. Since it is his policy to plug the stage show as well as the feature, Miller figured that this was an ace high opportunity for him to grab off a flock of newspaper publicity and a bunch of good-will for his house. A conference with the postmaster followed and accordingly the transporters and distributors of love letters galore were invited to see how it was done on the stage.

They more than enjoyed the show, and none failed to express appreciation of the excellent program that was given. Prior to entering the theatre the mailmen posed for a picture. This picture broke next day in one of the leading papers. And, we'd like all to know, Miller made sure he secured one the day before the party, on the occasion of his visit to the postmaster's office. We are showing this picture here, and if you'll look it over you can pick out Miller, who wears the topcoat.

Just another example of what wide-awake showmanship is constituted, sez we. And we are of the opinion that you will agree with us on the statement. Are you, too, taking advantage of every opportunity that presents itself to you and plugging your house at all times? You know it's the best way to keep the box-office humming.

NEXT WEEK!
THIRD ANNIVERSARY EDITION

SHOWMANSHIP FIFTEEN YEARS AGO!

. . . we hardly expected so many of the old-timers (in experience, we mean) to spot this new Club feature so soon, but spot it they did and they don't seem to be the slightest bit backwards about telling us so . . . and we're mighty glad they like it too. . . Another good slant is that so many high-pressure boys are discovering their "original" ideas dating back to fifteen and more years ago . . . but maybe the discovery will make them all the more anxious to really create a new and worthwhile bit of merchandising . . . and then again, if they are hep. to all the old ideas they may be able to dress them up in such new clothes that they'll begin to look like they just stepped out of the bandbox . . . but to get back to those fifteen years ago. . . !

The present controversy about the supposed shortage of pictures with kiddie appeal brings to light the fact that the same argument was staged back in 1916 by Harry Graham, manager of the Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, Wisc. . . he too was experiencing trouble in getting somewhere near the supply to meet the demand, so far as Milwaukee was concerned . . . and on the subject of children shows, we also find that Manager Max Allen of the Monarch Theatre in Edmonton, Canada, was successfully running shows for youngsters . . . so history once more reveals that present problems were just as much problems then as now. . . Mrs. Jane Olney, another progressive showwoman located at the Dreamland Theatre in Redding, Cal., won plenty of local good-will when she sponsored and organized a juvenile band of youngsters as a publicity medium for her theatre. . . . H. B. Groves, directing the operation of the Olympic Theatre in Sioux City, Ia., distributed laughing masks, properly imprinted, as an exploitation gag for "The Iron Claw". . . . Confronted with a peculiar situation, Manager J. A. Karnes of the Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va., met it in a somewhat novel manner . . it seems that many of his patrons requested a certain picture and the rental for that picture was more than Karnes could afford to pay . . . he made a canvas of the better known people in his community and secured their consent to paying a dollar each to view the picture . . . in this way he was sure of no less than a hundred and fifty of them . . . further subscriptions enabled him to engage the large orchestra needed to play the music-score for the attraction . . . these subscribtions, plus the regular attendance made it possible for him to present the attraction. . . . Manager Jensen of the Hollywood Theatre in California decided that the ugly empty lot alongside of his theatre could be made useful and erected a large fence, neatly painted and used for the purpose of posting lithographs on his current and coming attractions . . . needless to say it proved a great bet for Jensen's house . . . you know that old line about necessity being the mother of invention . . . seems as though the papas were showmen. . . . Joe Gilday of the Willis Wood Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., built up an unusually large and impressive campaign to sell a new serial

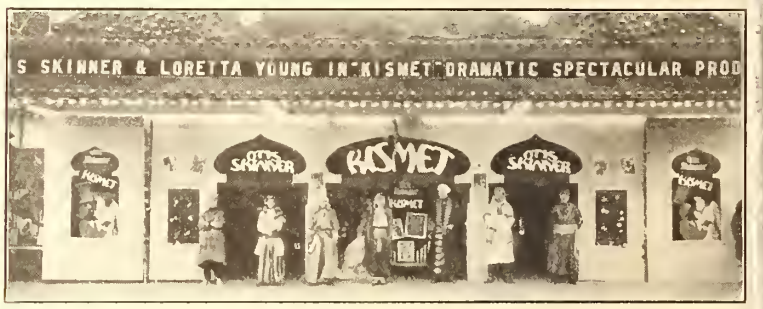
Wall Tied Up Local University's Class In Advertising As Stunt

The advertising class of Boston University was tied-up by Thomas F. Wall, manager of the Modern Theatre in Boston, Mass., and his assistant, Mr. Goldberg, and the tie-up certainly helped to put "It Pays to Advertise" before the theatre-going Bostonians.



More than 600 students at Boston University's college of business administration advertising classes attended the showing of the picture on Tuesday night, fourth day of the picture's showing. The students were asked to submit a report to their professor on the salient points in advertising that the picture deals with.

Quoting from one of the newspaper write-ups, "This is the first time that any college class has been asked to see a film replete with humor, plot and educational values, as part of their 'homework'." The stunt gave considerable publicity to the theatre and picture not only in the University but also in the homes of the students who attended the classes.

Egan Atmospheric Front On "Kismet" Clicks In Calgary

More atmosphere from Pete Egan! This time it's a front that he constructed at the Palace Theatre in Calgary, Alberta, when he was playing "Kismet."

As is being done lately by Pete, the entire front of the theatre was covered with compoboard, painted in atmospheric style, and set up to dazzle the eye. What do you think of the front? We're showing it here. The entire staff of the theatre was dressed in atmospheric array, too. They appear in the photo, too.

Pete, at the Palace, has plenty of space with which to play now, and he more than takes advantage of it to give his theatre a full dress. We've shown you other fronts that were on display at the theatre and we think that you'll agree they had the punch that is always necessary to the showman who wants his display to catch the eye of the pedestrian and sell.

Incidentally, we are sure that you'll be glad to know that Pete is fitting into his new assignment just like a glove. It won't be long now before he knows the town right and left. Then you can expect even more along the show-selling line than Pete is now turning out. Right, Pete?

Frias Still Active; Doing Good Work At Plaza In El Paso

Five specially decorated windows advertised "The Conquering Horde" for Carlos Frias when the film played the Plaza Theatre in El Paso, Texas.

Everyone of the five stores co-operating handle "Rodeo Clothes" which are very well known for their Western quality in Texas. The windows contained all kinds of photographs from the picture with special cards in the center containing the title of the picture, theatre and playdates. The windows were fixed artistically by the stores' window trimmers with nothing but Stetson hats, cowboys' outfits and one or two windows added saddles to their display. This co-operative display on the part of the five leading merchants considerably enhanced the selling value of the picture.

Frias, incidentally, capitalizes on the work he hands his local tailor, and not so long ago secured a half-page co-operative ad that helped sell "Unfaithful." The ad was paid for by a dry-cleaning establishment and was laid out by the theatre management. On the left side of the ad was a cut of Ruth Chatterton and forceful sales copy about the picture as well as cast, name of theatre and playdates.

At the upper right of this ad was a picture of the theatre's ushers. And directly underneath this picture was copy, "We feel proud to be able to show El Paso the quality and the careful attention given clothes which are entrusted to us for their smart and clean appearance! Plaza ushers greet you with a smile of satisfaction, confident in the knowledge that their uniforms are dry cleaned by our latest and most sanitary process. —The Odorless Cleaners."

Here's one that you, too, can try if you hand your local tailor enough business and he advertises in the paper. Thanks, Carlos.

l Weiss Continues urning Out Show- anship In Bristol

Al Weiss is batting them out at the Cameo Theatre in Bristol, Conn., and, from all indications, doing a good job of it. We are passing along some of his work so that you can look it over and perhaps use some of it in your own town.

For "East Lynne," Al made up a special four-page newspaper, identical in style with a regular newspaper, and tabbed it "Cameo Theatre News." It contained stories and pictures on the film and was well made up. They went over big when distributed about the town.

Weiss' next was a herald on "Body and Soul." He headed off his copy with "Are You Interested in Your Body and Soul?" The two inner pages carried a cut and catchy copy of the picture. The last page of the herald was devoted to a listing of the "Spring Festival of Hits," which was announced for future showings.

On "Scandal Sheet," he used a trick that many showmen make use of: the capsule gag. In a capsule he placed a herald asking: "Would You Print a Story About a Beautiful, but Faithless Woman If She Were Your Wife?" (Then was listed the star and the picture.)

These stunts are but a few of the ones Weiss is pulling at Bristol, but we are passing them along in order that you can see he is still on the go and hitting them out just the way he did when he was in Jacksonville, Fla., selling shows. Oke, Al. Keep it up, and remember we are always glad to hear from you.

Here's Some Shining Work On "City Lights" Credit Russell Bovim

Some more of Russell Bovim's activities while at the Loew's Theatre in Canton, O., is here presented. And we think that when you get through looking over his work you'll agree with us that "City Lights" was given some pretty classy ballyhooing to apprise the residents and theatre-goers of Canton that the Chaplin film was on view.

In the upper left-hand corner of the group of photos we are showing can be seen a corking stunt—a tie-up with a haberdashery shop. Now don't get us wrong and think we are going into a rave over a tie-up. It's this: the first time that this exclusive shop ever has been tied-up was when Bovim did it on "City Lights." The dealer donated the entire window to a display on Chaplin. Look the display over and see how cleverly it is arranged. Two life-size cut-outs of the shuffling comedian were placed on either side of the window. The center of the window contained a miniature 24-sheet board. Stills and small cut-outs helped to further enhance the window's effectiveness.

The upper right photo shows a sign painted on a couple of windows to plug the picture. The sign drew plenty of attention. In the lower left photo is seen a street ballyhoo that drew lots of laughs for pedestrians, but also threw the local cops into a panic. They were afraid the cow would get loose and cut-up about the town. Fortunately, nothing of the sort happened. And "City Lights" went over ace high.

The last photo of our group depicts a novel ballyhoo for "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." Cross sections of an apartment were built and placed on a truck. A boy sat in the tub; a dummy reposed in the bed; and a boy sat in the parlor reading the paper. The ballyhoo commanded attention wherever it was on display. And it was on display in the city and in the suburbs. Oke, Russell! We're always glad to see your work and to pass it along because there is bound to be some points of value and interest to the readers and members of the Managers' Round Table Club. Let's have some more.

to his community . . . which is good common sense in any spot, anytime . . . if the serial is worth playing it's worth plugging and that is just what Gilday proceeded to do . . . and here is another well-known personality of today whose activities fifteen years ago was of much interest in his own part of the country . . . we have reference to Fred Wehrenberg, then operating the Best Theatre in St. Louis who started to give away souvenirs for Easter at his theatre . . . George Van Alstyne of the New Glove Theatre in Gloversville, N. Manager Grampp, handling the Orpheum Theatre of Rockford, Ill., gave his patrons something different when he presented a ten reel attraction, "The Ne'er Do Well" at advanced prices . . . and what's more he packed them in during the run of the picture . . . how did he accomplish this? . . . well, if you must know . . . he gave the picture a fine advertising campaign which clicked on all cyclinders . . . as witness the results . . . that's what counts. . . . Robert Thompson, running a theatre in a mighty small town . . . 500 people to be exact . . . worked out a co-operative arrangement with his local school authorities which paid big dividends in b. o. receipts for his theatre located in Lawson, Mo. . . . here is how he handled it: . . . finding that the principal and superintendent wanted suitable subjects for school children, he got together with them and helped in the suggestions and selection of certain pictures . . . the results was that it was announced in school every week and the show held at Thompson's Theatre to capacity . . . besides the fine receipts at a small admission, his theatre soon became household word in the community. . . . W. H. James L. Oh well . . . our fingers are getting tired of tapping out these little tidbits for this week's contribution to your education on what showmanship consisted of fifteen years ago, so we'll take leave until next week. . . . Complete Campaign Was Engineered By Riester For Picture

Fifty million stunts seemed to be what George J. Riester, manager of the Palace Theatre in Canton, Ohio, used to plug "Fifty Million Frenchmen" when it played the theatre he manages.

Here's Riester's campaign: A window tie-up on "latest French creations," secured from a leading shop; a "Special French Frappe" at the leading drug stores and soda fountains; window displays on imported French perfumes; 2,000 imprinted paper bags, furnished by local merchants, and carrying copy, "We Recommend You See (picture);" 2,000 Government postcards containing selling copy on the picture; displays of stills in leading jewelry and luggage shops; as a teaser plug, the staff wore banners, "Fifty Million Frenchmen Is Coming;" a special front display, the tone of which was blue, white and red, and covering the entire front of the theatre; an illuminated shadow box, a week in advance in the foyer, and painted in attractive colors and hand lettered copy; window cards were spotted in the town and in the surrounding countryside; street car card, radio announcement, thirty inserts in frames, placed in downtown stores, music plugs in large stores; special heralds on the film, as well as heralds on "Stolen Jools," the N.V.A. short; automobile hangers; and newspaper space.

These completed the campaign. And did the entire thing go over? It did! Despite the fact that the opening day was Easter Sunday, a beautiful Spring afternoon, a day when nearly every auto was on the road, the house was packed. That shows what showmanship will do. Keep it up, George, and keep us posted on the rest of your work.

Full Page Ad Run Weekly By Hepp Is A Profitable Stunt

Here's a gag that we believe will interest those showmen who boast newspapers in their towns. We refer to small towns such as Greeley, Neb., which has less than a thousand population, but nevertheless has a fine little newspaper. The page that we are showing is the page ad that is weekly inserted in the local paper. You will notice that it is made up in newspaper style, too. Of the stunt, Jack R. Hepp, of the Idylhour Theatre, says:

"Our first page ad appeared about thirty weeks ago and was devoted entirely to the exploitation of 'Dixiana.' The ad created so much comment that we decided to make it a regular feature. Naturally, as we make three changes each week, the future ads carried copy pertaining to all of the programs for the coming week. The success of the venture was apparent from the first. It appeals particularly to the 'fans' as it contains a great deal of material found in the fan magazines sold to the public.

"It would first appear that the formation of such an ad each week would entail considerable work on the part of the exhibitor. Such is not the case. The press or campaign books supplied by the exchanges furnish all of the material used. Scene and star cuts, also supplied by the exchanges, are used to spot the sheet. In preparing the copy general 'review' plug is clipped from the press books for each of the programs offered. Of course, it will be necessary to rewrite the heads to meet the individual type requirements of the newspaper. Several small 'interest' stories of the stars or production are used for each program to fill the balance of the page. All of the clipped material is pasted on copy paper and submitted to the composing room foreman. After the type matter is set and the cuts cast and the page ready for makeup, we go to the composing room and personally superintend the layout.

"In our case the ad always appears as page three of the newspaper. It has come to be a standard feature and is eagerly read. The ad has created considerable comment in this section of the country and several neighboring exhibitors have announced their intention of adopting the idea."

Mr. Hepp invites anyone wishing further information of the subject to correspond with him at the Greeley Theatre and he'll be glad to furnish the desired data. We want to thank him for his offer, and we hope that we'll hear from him again. And accept our congratulations on the stunt, Jack.

About Uniforms!

Here is a subject calling for more than passing attention. If you don't believe it, just keep your eyes open the next time you go theatre-visiting. Note, particularly how neat or untidy the ushers' and doorman's uniforms are kept.

If you look ancient, sloppy, unpressed or dirty, you can bet your bottom dollar that that's the way the whole theatre is being run. If, on the contrary, you find them new-looking, clean, well pressed and neat, again we say, that's the way the rest of the theatre is being run.

Whoever said that a man can be judged by the company he keeps could well afford to add that the manager can be judged by the way his employees look. And that's no fable, either.

But don't overlook the fact that just because you spend a lot of dough for beautiful looking and well made uniforms, that the obligation ends there. Nix. Like an automobile, it's not the original cost, it's the upkeep. And ditto for those uniforms. If you don't keep them clean, well pressed and new-looking, they'll go to the dogs in less time than it takes to think it over.

Some houses furnish the staff with uniforms and then make them keep those outfits in perfect condition all the time. We can't pass judgment on that scheme because we don't know whether you are giving your boys enough to warrant their paying for pressing and cleaning, but whether they or the theatre foots the bills, those uniforms must be spic and span all the time.

And as a closing word to those smaller houses who maintain boys on the floor without any uniforms, may we suggest to you that if the house is worth keeping open it's worth buying a few uniforms for. The cost can be gauged by what you can afford to spend.

BABY POPULARITY CONTESTS!

As a leader for box-office promotion the old reliable baby popularity contest has few equals in show business and to further prove that it is just as good now as it was some years ago when it was being taken from one town to the other. The Ritz Theatre in Newark, N. J., recently concluded a most profitable and interesting contest of this nature.

Over twenty merchants were tied in to the contest and when we tell you that over three hundred entries were received in the first week, you may well understand how popular the gag was going over in Newark.

In addition to the marvelous local angle which he engineered and put through, Mr. Stein also secured the backing of the Governor of New Jersey and one of the largest newspapers in Newark. With such a start off it was not surprising that he continued to build up interest until everyone in Newark was talking about this marvelous baby contest.

If some of you showmen are looking for a box-office stimulant, and want to get the whole town talking besides giving you an opportunity of lining up an unlimited number of merchants then we heartily recommend that you take a crack at the Baby Popularity Contest and follow it through to a good finish. If you are successful remember many of your brother managers are interested in the details. Pass them along.

Atmospheric Front On "Rango" Clicks For Landers-Welker

The atmospheric front conceived and executed by Jim Landers, managing director of the Aztec Theatre in San Antonio, Texas, and the director of publicity, "Bud" Welker was effective enough to start a lot of word-of-mouth comment circulating on "Rango"—the picture being plugged.

The lobby, a week in advance, carried the display which consisted of a false ceiling and walls, constructed of lumber and chicken wire. Laurel twigs and moss were hung on the wire. Tiger cut-outs from the poster paper were fastened to the wire giving the appearance of a tiger emerging from the foliage. Panels of various sizes were hung on the foliage and wire, and carried copy on the picture. The box-office, located in the lobby was covered with green palm leaves, giving it a resemblance of a thatched house.

On the playdates, the same decorative scheme was carried out front, with the exception that old tennis and volley ball nets—promoted from the City Recreation Department—were used to string the laurel and moss. About the entrance was placed the four-foot cut-out letters plugging the title. A line, unnoticeable in the photograph, was carried above the title, reading: "Stranger Than Fiction." Another line, underneath the title stated, "And Ten Times As Thrilling." Pedestrians could see the sign plainly. Shadow boxes were also placed on both undersides of the marquee. If you'll look closely alongside the letter "O" in "Rango" you'll be able to see one of them. Masks for these shadow boxes are made of used beaverboard. Cut-out letters, backed with vari-colored crepe paper are used. The masks are placed in the lobby as advance cards, and then moved out front during the run of the picture to serve as a shadow boxes.

We are glad to note that Landers is still batting them out, as it has been some time since we have heard of his work. Let's hear from you more often, Jim, as we are sure that you'll have some interesting work to pass along.

Gallagher Featured A Variety Of Stunts On "Illicit" Selling

With such a variety of stunts as was used by Gerald Gallagher, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Sioux City, Ia., it was a pretty sure thing that one or the other would hit and boost up business on "Illicit."

In addition to the routine screen, billboard, lobby and newspaper advertising, Gallagher used 5,000 throwaway cards, each bearing one letter of the title, "ILLICIT." Anyone who collected a complete set of 7 cards, won a free admission to the theatre, but that was difficult, because Gallagher held out on the Cs. On the back side of the card, Gallagher used the following copy:

Illicit" means illegal and unlicensed according to the dictionary, but 'Merely being modern' according to the heroine of 'ILLICIT,' the talkie that dares to tell the truth! Capitol, Starts Friday, March 13."

A tie-up was made with the wholesaler of a nationally known brand of cigarettes in Sioux City, whereby Gallagher provided him with window streamers that were placed on 125 windows in the city. These streamers were printed on glued paper, and bore the illustration of the star with a cigarette between her fingers. The copy read:

"They Both Satisfy! (Blank) Cigarettes and the outspoken talkie, 'ILLICIT.' It dares to tell the truth! Starts Friday, March 13—Capitol."

The Classified Advertising Department of the Sioux City Journal sponsored a contest whereby readers were invited to reassemble a jumbled cut into the shape of a wedding ring. This contest was tricky enough so that there were not too many winners.

But some of the hardy readers and those perennial devotees of contests made sure that they got their tickets. Which was oke with Gallagher, as it meant word-of-mouth publicity for him.

PICTURES OR BRAINS?

WHICH DOES THE INDUSTRY NEED MOST?

E. S. C. Coppack

There is no denying the fact that good pictures are not only essential for good business, but absolutely necessary; yet, by virtue of the same argument, brains are equally as important.

In this little yarn we are endeavoring to prove that institutional merchandising is just as essential to a theatre's success as are picture tie-ups and exploitation. And no small amount of the credit goes to this man Coppack for the numerous means he has created to bring this about.

If you are weary of how this, that or the other picture is being sold to the public, read how other things besides pictures are being sold and made to count in dollars and cents at the box office. Thousands of other showmen would be making a wise move if they started to emulate the methods of Coppack because the stuff he pulls makes for much goodwill and good feeling between theatre and patron everywhere.

It is a genuine pleasure to pay this tribute to an alert showman and we hope that much more of his "doings" will occupy a prominent portion of our Club pages.

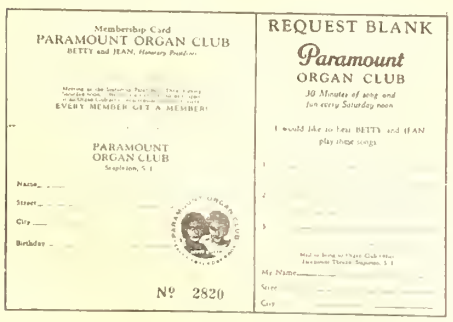
"CHICK"

EDWIN SEDGEWICK CHITTENDEN COPPACK. WHAT a name! But WHAT a showman!!!

Some bird, maybe it was Longfellow, Abe Kabbible or perhaps Shakespeare, once wise-cracked and said, "What's in a name?" And just because no one took the trouble to answer they let it go at that.

But here is what's in the name of (whew) Edwin Sedgewick Chittenden Coppack (imagine having to sign that name in full a hundred times a day). It is the handle of a bird who is making more history by accomplishments in the eastern show-world than a lot of the guys who think they are Mr. Showman in pusson.

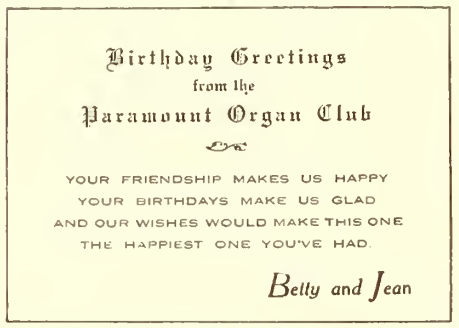
Maybe you'd like to learn a little more about Edwin—oh, hell—Coppack will be about as much of his name as we will try to use from now on. Well, here is a bit of dirt gleaned from the "Staten Island Advance," the local paper working so well with Coppack to make the Paramount Theatre in that New York Borough an outstanding institution. Says the "Advance":



"He is 24 and still a stranger to the Double Life that Lohengrin beautified. On Manila shores he passed his kidlet days, thrice crossing the Pacific's expanse before he was three. He skipped through grammer school in three and a half years. The other kids took eight. At 14 he taught school in Texas and was the youngest ferule-swinger in the state. To add a sensational touch, he was expelled from Texas University when his prexy discovered he was operating a roof garden and three orchestras on the side!"

What He Is Doing

Let's get serious for a while now and dig into the interesting part of this tale about Coppack. Because we are particularly anxious for you to learn that here is a showman who can make his theatre a household word, not through the pictures they play, but because of the never-ceasing parade of institutional activities and special events always taking place at the Paramount Theatre.



If we are to believe everything the home office or what our numerous bosses tell us, we would have to assume that only good pictures are essential to the success of any theatre. But Coppack and his showmanship prove that such is not the case by any manner of means. True, he knows that good pictures are of great importance, but whether his pictures happen to be good, bad or rotten does not stop him from constantly engineering something new to attract the attention of the Staten Island theatregoer.

It would take more pages than the entire Club section uses were we to go into a complete description of this man's activities; so we'll just use what space we can afford to tell you a little about his recent doings. You'll agree that they were not only interesting but mighty profitable as well.

The Organ Club

Coppack has a team of organists known as Betty and Jean, that are a credit to the theatre. So with such an asset, why should he just be content with their ability to play the organ? Here is how he worked up interest in them and at the same time made the Paramount Organ Club a mighty popular gag out his way.

He organized the Club and soon had several thousand members who were wearing the Club buttons to the Saturday matinees every week. These members turned in Request Blanks containing the names of three songs they wanted to hear Betty and Jean play. These blanks, as you will note, had room for the name and address of the member. The fun they had during the thirty minutes of "song and fun," as the card announced, soon made this one of the most profitable ideas created.

Another slant of the Organ Club is the neat birthday card sent to the members on their birthday. Naturally, this is one of those sidelights which please the youngsters so much. We are also showing the card and how it was worded.

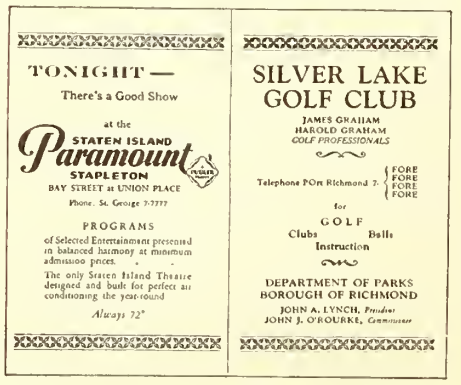
On the Golf Course

Golfing is just as popular on Staten Island as elsewhere; maybe a bit more since we happen to know of quite a few folks who journey all the way from the mainland of Manhattan and Brooklyn to enjoy the marvelous Silver Lake course. So Coppack offered to donate the score cards, utilizing only the back cover for the theatre's institutional copy. And we're making a cut of the card, too, just so you won't miss a single trick.

Another most interesting slant to Coppack and his methods is the Welcome Card mailed to every newcomer to Staten Island. The text of the cards tell the story completely. The means of securing the information for such a purpose are numerous, but, nevertheless, obtainable if you are on the job. Did you ever think of making arrangements with the real estate offices to furnish such information? Well, that's just one way of getting it. The appartment house superintendents is another.

He has created a slogan, "Keep Posted On What's Going On at the Paramount Theatre." And he plugs that slogan through a card in every laundry package; a post card to a large and impressive mailing list and numerous other ways via throwaways, etc. And if you don't believe the customers were anxious to know what's going on at the Paramount, stand outside any evening and see the crowds flocking into that sumptious house.

Novel Clock Contest



And here is another novel piece of business-building created by Coppack and successfully put over to big business and plenty of newspaper space. He ran a Novel Clock Contest, confining all entrees to residents of Staten Island. The photo with this story will give you a slight idea of the number and variety of clocks entered in this contest. And when we say it had some novel clocks, we mean Novel. There was one in the form of a cat's head with one eye pointing to the hours and the other to the minutes. "Cockeyed clock" is what they called it and it must have been unique; it won first prize. Others included "twin clocks," a clock with a mouse inside, lighthouse clock and so on with most every variety you ever heard of—and plenty you never will hear of.

The Fashion Show

Recently we hear rumors of a great event taking place at the Staten Island Paramount and upon inquiry learned that a Fashion Show was going to take place for an entire week. Coppack again demonstrated his showmanship by su rounding this great event with so muc local color that it was exclusively Staten Island affair from beginning t end. Local merchants only, all loc models to wear the spring creation Everyone dined and entertained by a lo cal restaurant. And coached by a loca girl who knew her Fashion Shows.

THE GREAT IMPORTANCE OF INSTITUTIONAL MERCHANDISING!

When we tell you that he packed th house throughout two complete change of program that week we are telling yo how successful his Fashion Show was And it can be just as profitable for an other showman who is not afraid of hard work and willing to go out and see a good idea through to a big conclusion Don't do things by half measures, is Coppack's idea of this business and he proves it by the way he goes out and works.

Picture Plugs Too

Don't get the impression that he pays no attention to merchandising his screen attractions because we are emphasizing his other activities. On the contrary, he puts over some mighty fine campaigns for his pictures, but since the essence of this story is about his showmanship as applied to angles other than pictures we have left the screen selling in the background.

It is not our intention of going into his screen merchandising in this particular story, other than to assure you that such activity is as outstanding as the slants we have discussed in this article. Some of them have appeared on the Club pages as regular exploitation activity; others will be incorporated into another yarn about Coppack and his up-to-the-minute showmanship in connection with the Paramount Theatre.

Originality

For every angle presented on the Club pages, someone will step forward and try to convince us that such an angle is old and has been worked to death. Maybe so. We don't care a tinkers gosh darn if they are old. It's the original touches that a competent showman adds to an old idea that makes it new so far as we are concerned. We have often said in the past that it is not the ability to create a new idea so much that counts today as the abiilty to take an old idea and dress it up in 1931 style. We repeat that same opinion with added emphasis because it is so true. Don't waste idle moments speculating on whether an idea is new or original, use those moments to figuring out how they can be used for your theatre and community. If they bring dollars to the b.o. your efforts have not been in vain.

Show business needs more Edwin Sedgewick Chittenden Coppacks. We could even forgive them a name like that if they are as good as this wide-awake showman.

"Run Food Shows For Needy Whenever You Can"—McAuliffe

In the past we have often run articles in which we related the various activities of showmen running "Food Shows," and also brought out the point that they are valuable good-will builders for the theatre. We are here presenting a story that we believe will interest you considerably. The writer, E. A. McAuliffe, resident manager of the Bellefontaine Amusement Company in Bellefontaine, Ohio, says:

"From time to time in the Club section, I have noted mention made of an occasional 'food' or 'charity' show being given to which the admission was articles of food stuffs. I am wondering what you will think, what the other managers will think and say, when I tell you I have held 'Food for the Needy' shows for 12 consecutive Saturdays, from November 29, 1930, to February 14, 1931, inclusive, receiving and distributing through the Knights of Columbus and the King's Daughters, a ladies' charitable organization, an average of 45 half-bushel baskets of edibles, consisting of potatoes, apples, carrots, pumpkins, onions, canned vegetables, canned and jarred preserves, jellies, cereals, honey, butter, eggs, flour, nuts, milk, bread, tea, coffee, and oftentimes meat, and as there has been a great deal of distress and privation here this winter, it is needless to say the donations were gratefully received, and, too, has built up a world of good will.

"At these shows I ran the regular program (they were held in the morning, after the first two, which carried a limitation as to admission time—from 1:30 to 2)—we screened at the matinee and night shows.

"When the new house opened, on February 12, I thought it would be the decent thing to do to share the credit and 'bouquets' with them, so arranged for the 'food matinees' to be given at each house alternate Saturdays, and they will be continued until such time as the weather will permit the starting of some of the many building and highway projects planned for the spring and summer.

"Like hundreds of other exhibitors, I find the Club pages not only interesting, but profitable, and have used many of the stunts (both before and after reading of them; ran the complete letter of James E. West, Chief Scout Executive in opening ad for 'Father's Son' last week), described therein, and it would be a real calamity were they to be discontinued as they have been of immeasurable help to all exhibitors.

"'Been banging' at this 'game' for a long time, 15 years to be exact, as salesman, branch manager, state right distributor and exhibitor, and like it as well, and am as much of a picture 'fan' as in the earlier days. This is not intended as a autobiography, more as a personal letter (and my first since enrolling in the Club), and the desire to spur other exhibitors to running 'Food for the Needy' shows regularly, or at least often, during the trying times we are faced with."

Oke, Mac! We are glad to be able to pass along your expression on the "food show" idea, and we hope that whenever you have any more comments on any subject that you wish to present to your fellow showmen you won't hesitate to pass them along for discussion on our pages.

Spengeman's Display On "Rango" Netted House Some Comment

The theatregoers of Front Royal, Va., await with interest the special window displays that form a part of Edward C. Spengeman's showselling at the Warren Park Theatre, under the direction of Sidney Lust.

When "Rango" played the theatre, Spengeman arranged a special window display in a vacant store window adjoining the theatre. The display was well made up, and represented a scene in the jungle with miniature animals, borrowed from a local dealer, being spotted about. Cut-outs supplied the necessary atmosphere. Stills were grouped about the window.

For "Hell's Angels" the same space was utilized, only here, in keeping with the tone of the picture, was depicted a string of miniature airplanes, swooping down from a series of cut-out clouds. The entire background was comprised of stills from the picture. To further carry out the scheme, the marquee of the theatre was dressed up with cut-outs of tanks, airplanes, and two Zeppelins. A great deal of comment was occasioned as a result of this display.

Spengeman was kind enough to send us a photo of his "Rango" display, but unfortunately it wouldn't show up for reproduction. However, Ed, better luck next time. Let's hear from you soon.

A Calendar With a New Slant!

Barney Gurnette, manager of the T. & D., Jr. Lodi Theatre out in California, decided that a new twist was necessary for his large program calendar hanger. Below you see the result.

He has made good use of the miniature cuts on the various pictures and thereby got away from the solid type layout generally used for this kind of mailing piece. We heartily recommend this idea to others who now send out hangers of this kind. The cost cannot be so much as to make it too expensive and if it peps up your advertising material it ought to be well worth the little added cost.

Anniversary Week Is Big Trade Boost For Carolina House

Manager E. E. Whitaker celebrated the 4th anniversary of the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

A local bakery co-operated by donating a hundred-pound birthday cake. This cake was placed in the lobby one week in advance and was beautiful to look at, too. On each side was the program for the week and a Paramount-Publix sig cut. There was also one on the front of the cake; this being made of butter cream.

To instill further interest in the birthday cake, a guessing contest was staged with the result of over 8,000 people filling out the specially-printed slips.

A three-way panel acted as a background to the cake. On one panel, to the left of the cake, was listed the program for the first half of the week including a still from the picture and on the other side was the listing of the program for the second half of the week. The center top panel contained copy, "Estimate the weight of our Birthday Cake—1st prize, one month's pass; 2nd prize, three weeks pass; 3rd prize, two weeks pass; and next five, two passes each.

A tie-up with a local florist resulted in their donating 1200 roses. 200 of these were given to the first feminine arrivals on Monday night and 1,000 on Thursday night, the opening of the second half of the week's program. Each flower had a tag attached to it giving credit to the Art Flower Shop.

The Charlotte Observer sold a two-page co-operative page. The background for the page was a scattered cut of Will Rogers and the Progressive Business Block in which the Carolina theatre is located.

A contest on this was sponsored by the newspaper; the idea to assemble all the pieces in the proper manner. Over 1500 answers were received; some very artistically arranged, some made out of wood and many other original ways of creating an impression on the judges.

Whitaker also tied up with a local bank—getting cards in the bank's windows and inside the bank; the cards saying something in reference to banking the money at this bank as well as saying that every baby born during 4th Anniversary Week at the Carolina Theatre would be given $1 to start its bank account. Inasmuch as no babies were born during this particular week, the stunt cost the theatre nothing.

If you want some handy advice when your own anniversary rolls around, we suggest you make note of the page and issue of this one and keep it where you can locate it when you are ready to start. Whitaker won't mind, we are sure.

NOW FOR A "MUTT DERBY"!

LEROY JOHNSON'S CLICKED

"Oh, what's the use, it can't be done in my town."

Just eleven ordinary words, but a complete description of what's wrong with a whole lot of theatre managers.

Anything can be done if you have the will to make a try at it. Maybe the original idea won't look the same after you start working on it with those necessary changes to meet local situations and conditions. But, nevertheless, it CAN be done.

We have found after three years of contact, either personally or via the mail, with thousands of showmen that there are two kinds. Those who can do most anything and those who can't. The two classifications are quickly recognized according to the manager himself.

We well recall from our last year's jaunt across country, a certain chap in a northwestern city, who so generously told us that he found the Club pages interesting and liked to know what other showmen were doing. "But," he said, "you know Chick that ninety-nine out of every hundred of those stunts are impractical except for the theatre where they were pulled."

It CAN Be Done

And we also recall asking him to select one at random from an issue lying on his desk. He did. He picked a widely used gag. We asked him whether that could be worked in his town and he said, emphatically, "No!" So, in the brief space of twenty minutes we outlined the entire campaign to fit his theatre like a glove, merely from asking about certain local conditions and fitting the stunt to the community and house. Let that sink deep. FIT THE STUNT TO SUIT THE THEATRE AND NOT THE THEATRE TO SUIT THE STUNT.

Why do we lead up to a story about a Mutt Derby with such an introduction? Because, at first glance many managers may pass it up as "just another gag," when it is deserving of most careful consideration, and worth trying.

Here is a stunt which, handled the right way, should click for any theatre anywhere. We say that because it has that peculiar appeal that attracts the attention of the whole community and gives them something to talk about.

As a concrete example of what can be accomplished we want you to know that it was just recently engineered with great success

Dowling Used Two Good Stunts When Playing "Dracula"

Two good stunts were used by E. M. Dowling, manager of the Publix-Granada Theatre, Olyphant, Pa., in connection with the publicizing of "Dracula." One was an outside ballyhoo and the other an inside stunt.

The ballyhoo consisted of a man attired as "Dracula" in full dress suit, high silk hat, cloak and wearing a mask. Whenever a crowd gathered about him he would fling back his cloak and there disclose copy written on his shirt front. This copy played up the title of picture, name of theatre and play dates.

The inside stunt Dowling used in advance. As the trailer finished the house lights were turned off, then a green spot moved all around the house and on the audience and then finally was spotted on a man on the stage dressed as Dracula. Only this Dracula wore a skull head instead of the mask. His hands were covered with white gloves. And as a deep voice back stage cried out, "Beware of Dracula," the man slowly walked across the stage facing the audience and holding his white gloved hands in front of him. The patrons seemed to enjoy it very much.

The lobby also was dressed in a mystery atmosphere with the web effect, skulls and crossbones suspended from the web, all lights changed to light green, the burning of incense, etc.

We are reproducing a cut of the figure used in both stunts in order to show Club members how the costumes were designed. Dowling tells us that he was fully repaid for both efforts. Thanks, E. M., for passing this along. Keep up the good work and let us hear from you again right soon. Oke?

Mutts—Mutts—Mutts—

Two hundred and forty-seven entries is the answer to whether it can or cannot be done. And as further proof of the public interest it created we further offer the layout of newspaper clippings which will also show the way the newspaper handled the story end of the Derby.

Mr. Johnson's own description tells the story too well to permit our doing it for him, so just read what he has to say:

"Herewith are the clippings (see illustration accompanying this story) of the stunt we put on in regard to Mutt Derby which we thought you might pass on for what it is worth. We had an excellent bit of cooperation from the newspapers.

"Two hundred and forty-seven entries started from the Civic Auditorium, through the main street of the city, as you will notice by the stories, the traffic lights and bells meant nothing during the staging of this stunt, for the wheels of progress were at a standstill until those kiddies went by. A large bus was used to pick up the stragglers, those who were left behind owing to the fact that the dog or contestant got tired. Motorcycle police led the way and kept traffic in order in spite of the fact that it was a dark drizzly morning we had no casualties. The bus was to bring everyone to the finishing line as each contestant received a ticket for the show, for himself and mother, and dog food for his dog. Pictures were taken of the stunt by the Liberty cameraman and shown on the screen that evening."

Now You Try It

There you have it in a nutshell. The brief description, plus the reproduction of the clippings just about tell the story, or as much of it as any live-wire need know in order to start the ball a-rolling for his own theatre. And that is what we heartily recommend to every one of you. Not alone will your business prove the value of this stunt, but the interest it will create all over town and the publicity it will secure you, all make it more than worthwhile. And need we add that all the contestants on the stage should help many more shekels roll into the treasury?

We are grateful to Mr. Johnson for his kindness in sending us this material.

Van Hook Finds That Street Ballyhoos Are Valuable Aid To Him

Finding that street ballyhoos help him considerably in the selling of his shows, R. W. Van Hook of the Rialto Theatre in Morrilton, Ark., uses them whenever possible.

On "Sin Takes a Holiday," which he played not so long ago, Van Hook, secured a special car, bannered it, and sent it about town carrying the notice: "Watch This Car For 'Sin Takes a Holiday'." The teaser attracted considerable interest. This gag was followed up with an opening day stunt, in which the banner on the car was sniped with a new showing. A couple, blindfolded (but still able to see) drove the car about the town. They were unrecognizable.

The stunt went over well, as did another used on "Fighting Caravans." Here an old "mess wagon" was used, and appropriately bannered it was hauled about town by a couple of horses. We want to thank Van Hook for keeping us posted on his work, and we hope that we will hear from him again in the very near future regarding his show-selling in Morrilton. What do you say, "R. W."?

Mechanical Man Was Thrill To Residents Of Huntington, W. Va.

"The Bat Whispers" was being plugged, but despite the fact that the film is a thriller conducive to awe and shrieks and yells, it had nothing on the effect produced by the mechanical robot used by the showman handling the Palace Theatre in Huntington, W. Va., to plug the mystery film.

The robot walked about various parts of the town during the business hours and gave out heralds plugging the picture. It also gave a sales talk on the film. As the showman wished to exhibit the mechanical man to the school children in and about Huntington, the robot was transported on a truck to the schools, where the various principals dismissed classes in order that both students and faculty could witness the innovation. The youngsters were more than enthusiastic about the stunt, and more than one kid went to the theatre to see it again, where it was on view in front of the house during the run of "The Bat Whispers."

To say that it was a sensation in Huntington would be putting it mildly. The mechanical contrivance stopped traffic wherever it was put in operation. It was most assuredly one of the biggest bets that the showman had ever used to plug an attraction playing the theatre, and it gave the picture one of the finest and best plugs it could have received in Huntington.

Since showmanship of the sort is going on in the town, we'd like to see some more, and we hope that the showman responsible for the gag will pass along to us some of his future work so that we in turn can pass it along to the rest of the showmen all over the world.

Earle Holden Still Front Page Down In Palm Beach Theatre

Earle Holden of the Arcade Theatre in West Palm Beach, Florida again demonstrated that he was far from being asleep when he wanted to cash in on an important angle. As witness, the proof he sends us, of how he carried a P. S. under the Will Rogers column in the Palm Beach Daily Times calling attention to the fact that Rogers would be at the Arcade Theatre in "A Connecticut Yankee."

We suppose that many showmen will figure that there is nothing much to rave about in this connection. We can only suggest to them that they try selling an angle of this kind themselves, keeping uppermost in their mind the fact that they were getting their theatre ads directly under a column which is followed by the majority of the newspaper's readers plus the front page break which in many cities is a physical impossibility unless you start out to assassinate a couple of the city officials.

This is not the first time that we have broadcast the fine work of Earle Holden and we are quite sure it won't be the last, so if you keep your eye on the Club pages, we'll pass along some more interesting and valuable plans as created by Earle and which we know will come in mighty handy to showmen everywhere. Thank you, Earle. Let's hear some more from you.

Kids Who Had Never Seen Talkies Were Invited To Theatre

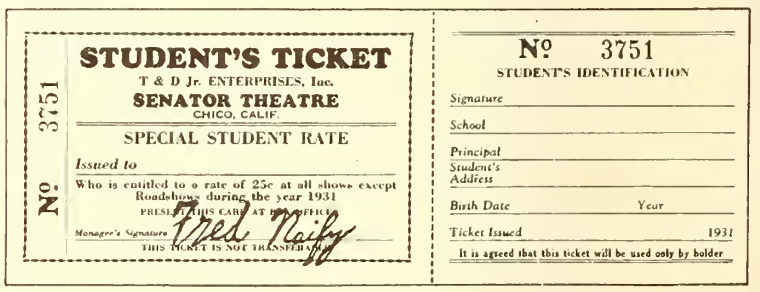
Playing host to some twen youngsters who had nev seen a talking picture was medium productive of consi erable publicity for the Capit Theatre, managed by A. Brow Parkes, in Williamsport, Pa.

The teacher of a rural scho not far from Williamsport had written in to Manager A. Brow Parkes that her pupils had never seen a talking picture an had not the means with which to enter the theatre. Throug Mr. Parkes' generosity, the children were brought to the theatr at the early matinee show and were taken through the building

"Gazing at the luxuriousness of the inside of the theatre the spaciousness and subdued lights, and treading on softl carpeted floors, the youngsters no doubt thought they were i a kind of heaven. They whispered to one another, nudged on another and took in the awe-inspiring sight with ill conceale admiration.

"Their reaction to the speaking dialogue was what migh perhaps have been expected of anyone in similar circumstances Their mouths automatically opened and continued in that posi tion until they felt satisfied that the strange screen would con tinue this transmission of words which they had heard about in their very own homes."

So stated the newspaper account.



It was a great party and was enjoyed thoroughly by the youngsters. Another who enjoyed the party was A. Brown Parkes, who derived inestimable pleasure from watching and listening to the kids.

Naify Has A Good Gag To Stimulate Student Attendance

To fellow Club members who are located in College communities Fred Naify, manager for T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, Chico, Calif., forwards through the Round Table medium a tried and proven idea which did a great deal toward stimulating trade at the Senator and National theatres of Chico.

Naify has distributed over 5,000 of these "Student's Tickets" (a copy of which is reproduced on this page) to all schools in Chico and surrounding territory, including the Chico State College. He personally sold the idea to the City superintendent of schools, who arranged distribution of the tickets through each school principal.

Admission at the T. & D. houses in Chico is 65c and 50c, but a holder of one of Naify's tickets can secure entry to any show for 25c. In the Chico College alone there is an enrollment of over 500 students, many of whom are working their way along. To these students particularly did Naify's cut rate stunt appeal and he tells us that results were most gratifying. Many students, he found, were on a very economical budget. They classed amusement as more or less a luxury and the half-price rate proved to be a means of bringing them to the theatre more often.

The numbered identification stub on the ticket is not only held in the box office as a record of issue, but is used as a means of sending the holder a pass on his or her birthday, that information also being noted on the stub. Naify also keeps check on those students who are graduating in order that tickets may be returned.

Thanks, Fred, for sending along this student plan of yours. Round Tablers will note that Naify did away with all resistance by starting in at headquarters. The rest was easy. We are certain that any manager in a college town who has not tried some scheme similar to this will be able to cash in on this one. There are lots of colleges in this country and therefore any number of managers who are interested in boosting trade. Maybe Fred will send along another idea for boosting college trade. And, let's hear from some other college town members.

ucette Ballyhoos en Cents A Dance" ith Special Record

When Roland Doucette, manager of the Uptown Theatre, New York City, played "Ten Cents a Dance" he got up a bally that probably created more word of mouth comment than anything that had been pulled in that section in many a day.

That the old S. R. O. sign worked overtime we can vouch for, cause we happened to be in that neighborhood looking over some eatres, and when we passed the Uptown there was such a crowd lling around the front of the house, we thought a riot was being ged.

What Doucette had done was to borrow from a local dealer mbination radio and electric phonograph and from the Columa Exchange he procured a special version of the Victor record- g of the popular song bearing the same title as the picture. In- rporated in the orchestration of the song were two announce- ents about the picture. A repeater was put on the record and ugged all day. At 7:00 each evening he switched off the record d tuned on Amos 'n' Andy and boy! they nearly had to get the serves out to clear the front of the theatre.

Oke, Roland. We're always glad to hear from you, and remember s to Martin Messenger. I guess the Ochs' Circuit is just about 00% Round Table Club by now. Right?

Hagerstown Md. Saw Great Fashion Revue; Boucher Put It Over

Hagerstown, Md., had an especial treat not so long ago when Frank Boucher of the Maryland Theatre staged a Fashion Show, the first Spring Fashion Revue ever to be held in the town, and gave the amazed populace an eyeful of the Boucher brand of showmanship.

Well, perhaps we shouldn't say that Frank gave an amazed populace an eyeful of showmanship; for Frank's showmanship is well known in Hagerstown. Indeed, it is as well known as himself. He knows every nook and corner of the town, and, besides this, knows its every whim. Which is why the Fashion Revue was a startling success. Four merchants contributed to its success—a hairdressing shop, a florist, a footwear and hosiery shop, and a gown and millinery shop. The newspapers gave the revue a marvelous write-up. And just take a look at the ads that Frank ran.

Included in the ads can be seen the special herald, which was made up in invitation form, carrying credits, and was distributed about the town. Some class to that herald, isn't there? Boucher got a great break in his film, too. It harmonized perfectly with the stage show. The entire cost of the campaign was borne by the local merchants, who were very glad to expend the money when they realized that it was one of the best investments in publicity and good-will that they had ever made.

Well, Frank, we think that you deserve a compliment on your work, and we gladly give it to you. We also want to thank you for the nice sentiments about our Fashion Show article and let you know that it is indeed gratifying to know that you tried it in all the towns and it worked out well for you.

HOW ABOUT SOME HERALDS?

The suggestion is advanced by L. W. Richmond, manager of the National Theatre, Boston, Mass., that we run a full-page of herald layouts, such as we have presented in one form or another in past issues of the Club pages.

Well, we're willing! So if you have any heralds on hand pass them along. And if they contain art work, pass them along as well.

Imprinted exchange heralds should not be included. We want original material direct from the theatres.

ANNIVERSARY MATERIAL!

Special stories, unusual exploitation and crack publicity material is rolling into Club headquarters at a great rate. From present indications this year's Birthday edition is going to be a cracker-jack and worth its weight in gold to members and showman who are always anxious to cash in on tried and proven activities.

And, as usual, Dick Kirschbaum has come through with another great cartoon to illustrate the spirit of the Round Table Club on reaching the third milestone.

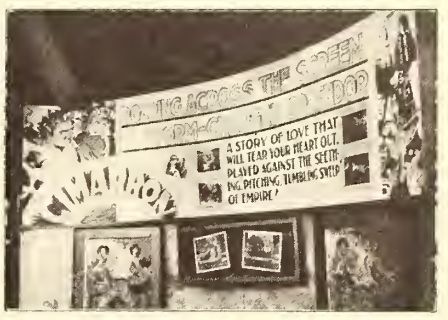
THE MAILING LIST!

For fear of over-emphasizing some particular slant we must, of necessity, stop plugging it. Mailing Lists ARE one of those particular slants and every week we make up our minds to say something more about them, then we reconsider and decide to lay off the subject for a little while.

Just recently we sent out a Club notice requesting that we be placed on the mailing lists of those members who have such a thing. The response was marvelous. But we also learned, with much regret, that many theatres have no mailing list at all.

It would be absurd for any one to take the attitude that they can suggest the activities of theatres all over the country. Therefore we do not want to be misunderstood or to be placed in the light of telling a manager what is right or wrong when it comes to a question about mailing lists.

Going into costs—for the moment—let us say that the average theatre can use three thousand programs a week. They should cost approximately 12 dollars delivered to the theatre. Two thousand of them mailed to a live mailing list would cost an additional cent per program. Envelopes cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $1.25 a thousand printed and ready for mailing. So the sum total (less addressing) is about 15 dollars a thousand. Now comes the question: Is it worth that much money for a good mailing list?



We would say, from our own experience, YES. What better medium is there to reach directly into the homes than a mailing list. The local paper? O. K., but a piece of mailing material can carry a different sort of a punch than the usual newspaper ad.

We have made no attempt to gauge the percentage of members using this form of business building as against those who don't care for it, but from the response for programs we should say that but one out of every 25 are not in favor of mailing lists.

Schmadeka Selling His Shows In Great Style In Lewiston

An ad was all that Ed C. Schmadeka, exploitation man for the Liberty Theatre in Lewiston, Ida., ran in order to secure a couple and have a stage wedding at the house.

The one little ad in the local newspaper was productive of a number of replies from couples about to be married, and from these answers Schmadeka picked the couple to take part in the stunt. All expenses were paid, which included transportation to the theatre, a minister, and the license. The local dealers more than enthused over the stunt, and they donated many valuable gifts which were presented to the couple. The gifts included a large wedding cake.

Few people in town knew who the couple were that were about to be married, as it was part of Ed's plan to keep the names secret until such time as he deemed it auspicious to break with the story. That he hit at the right time was shown by the crowd that turned out for the stage wedding. It rained like the old Nick that night. And when it rains in Lewiston, it rains! But the house was practically filled, and everything went over in great style, the theatre receiving reams of publicity. The merchants, who had had their gifts displayed in the lobby of the theatre, and in addition received free advertising, were more than pleased with the handling of the stunt. Chalk up another winner for Ed.

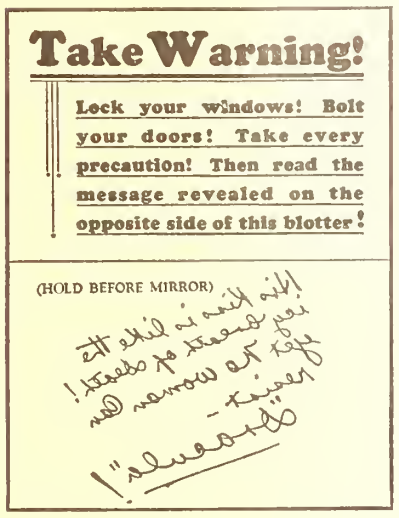
Now about his art work. He turns out some pretty good stuff along this line, and we are passing on some of his work for "Cimarron." This flash commanded the attention of every one and any one in the vicinity of it. Ed tries to see that pep and selling power is injected into the work and he more than succeeds.

He pulled a novel stunt not so long ago. With three pictures from a major producing company booked in a row, he labeled the week (company) Week and sold the three films to excellent results. On the sidewalk in front of the theatre was painted in colors that would easily wash off: (company) Week. It was bound to attract attention. And it did! These angles that Schmadeka often injects into his show-selling help him considerably in putting the show across to that few extra dollars so much desired by good showmen. Right, Ed?

Novelty Short Given Great Plug At Loew Houses In N. Y. City

"Strange As It Seems" is the title of the Universal short subject novelty reel that is playing in the Loew Theatres throughout the metropolitan district in New York City, and it's not strange to note that the reel is given considerable plugging wherever it is being presented.

Doubtless realizing the value of plugging interesting short subjects, showmen at whose house the reel is playing will most generally use a frame such as we are showing in the photo, which announces the title of the short and at the same time states that original drawing can be seen in one of the New York papers. The easel stunt, of one-sheet proportions, was devised by the Loew exploitation department, and is the first of its kind to be used on a one-reel subject. The newspaper mentioned co-operates with the theatres to the extent of publishing a notice announcing the series can be seen on the screen at various local theatres.



It is indeed interesting to note the remarkable progress that has been made in the plugging of the surrounding program constituting the well balanced film bill. The public, too, is getting conscious of the value of the short and is rapidly realizing the tremendous work that goes into the making of even the lowliest of them. The Hix series has proved a popular drawing card in various theatres, and the way the films are being plugged again bears out our contention that if the short has any sort of value, the showman who is a showman will soon get behind it and sell it for all it's worth.

Hendricks Employs Throwaway Blotter To Boost "Dracula"

The use of novelty heralds and throwaways is always an interesting topic for discussion on Club pages. The expense attached to exploitation of this kind is but slight when compared with other efforts which really accomplish nothing more than getting over a certain message to your theatre community.

The Club is in receipt of an expressive letter from Wm. L. Hendricks, manager of the Smoot Theatre, Parkersburg, West Va., —expressive in that with the exception of a bit of attached blotter, it contains nothing more than his signed name. Well, alright William, we'll try to do your letter writing for you so that the rest of the boys may know what you are doing in the way of selling shows down in Parkersburg.

Here is a little blotter throw-a-way which Hendricks used in exploiting "Dracula." We are reproducing both sides so that members may get the correct slant on its use. The reverse side has to be held in front of a mirror to decipher the message and in order to help members who do not have their mirrors handy we'll tell you what it says. Here tiz: "His kiss is like the icy breath of death yet no woman can resist—Dracula!"

Members will all agree that a little gag of this kind does not actually sell tickets but the point we want to get over is that it really accomplishes its mission by effectively delivering a message at small cost. Cards of this size can be slipped under doors, through mail chutes and tacked in a variety of places. A blotter is always useful. The eye will read the front side and human curiosity will prompt the reader to get a mirror for the inscription on the reverse side. Good work, Hendricks, and the Club thanks you for contributing this one. We are sure the same idea can be adopted to many other pictures. It is the constant use of little gags of this sort that keeps a theatre in the public eye. What about those other tricks up your sleeve, Hendricks? Let your fellow members know about them.

Newspaper Readers!

By Earle M. Holden

As much time and care should be devoted to the selection of the proper reader for your newspaper publicity as you spend on laying out your advertising. Because it must be taken into consideration where people will skip your ad they will probably read your news item of the day. I do not think that the term "reader" should be applied to a story in regard to your theatre, if you are situated in a city, whose papers co-operate to the extent that they give you daily space.

Any little item about patent medicines can be a reader, and each and every article that you place in a newspaper in regard to your attractions or to your theatre should be real live news and written as such.

The average newspaper reader tires very quickly of reading amusement news daily that is of a stereotyped nature, and articles that carry the sameness day in and day out with the results that many of them do not bother to look at the items on the amusement page, or theatre items should they be published under a heading in the newspaper.

Write Them Yourself

For this reason the press sheet should be gone over very carefully before you grab up a pair of scissors and snip out any old thing. A good plan to carry out would be to cast aside the press sheet entirely and plan and write your own news story. I have found this plan the best in the long run.

And there are several reasons why this should be done. In many instances the press sheet from the exhibitor is often prepared and printed even before the picture has been released, and in many times before the final scenes have been made. This means that many items find their way into the press sheet that would lead a reader into getting a wrong impression on the type of story pertaining to that particular picture. For instance, just this week I had occasion to glance very carefully over a press sheet on a coming attraction and selected one story in particular which was read very carefully. This press sheet story stated that "there were hundreds of scenes in natural colors." Prior to the time that I read the story I had the opportunity of seeing the picture in question and there were just two scenes in natural colors.

The average reader would have interpreted the story, had it been published in the papers, to have meant that almost the entire picture was in natural colors, as to their way of thinking "hundreds of scenes" would have covered quite a lot of ground.

Screening Is Important

Much benefit can be derived in the preparation of your theatre stories for the newspapers if you get the opportunity of screening your picture in advance. By doing this you will have first-hand information in regard to your picture and you should then be able to sit down to a typewriter and knock out an accurate message for the public, one that will tell the truth and not mislead them.

Besides, much good can be accomplished for you if in your news story you put some institutional copy and also be sure and make mention of the added atractions on the same program, but all this must be written in a snappy newsy manner, and not as you would write copy for an advertisement. The time of performances is also very important. In other words, Manning Uses News Reel To Sell Show In Greenwood, Miss.

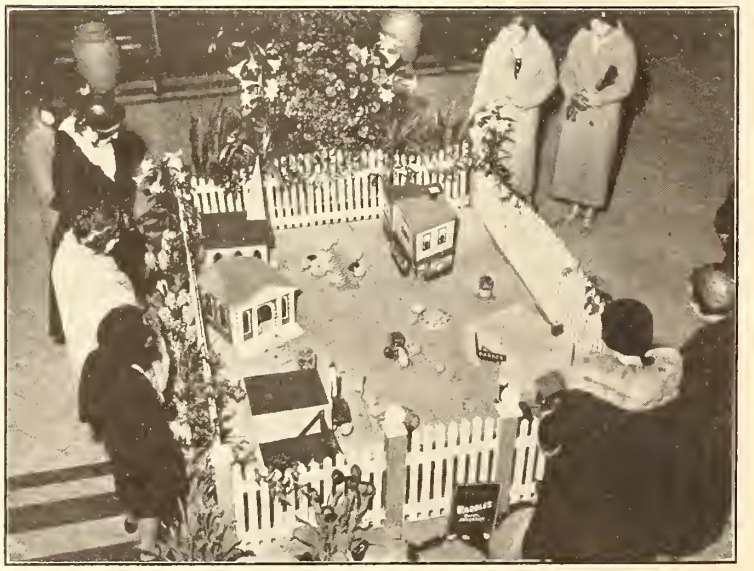
Always alert to capitalize on something to increase the box office receipts, Jack Manning of the Paramount Theatre, Greenwood, Miss., took advantage of the Newsreel featuring the Nicaragua earthquake.

Special throwaways, black ink on a yellow background, carried this message: "Extra! Extra! Extra! First close-up pictures of the NICARAGUA EARTHQUAKE. 500 feet of the actual earthquake taken by the camera man who was on the location when it happened. It's a sight of a lifetime. Paramount's Theatre today."

These throwaways were effectively distributed throughout the city and helped immeasurably in getting extra business.

It's really a pleasure to talk about showmanship on something other than the routine feature pictures, that's why we pushed this one ahead of some of the other material we had on hand. Thanks to the showmanship of Manning, he proves that a live-wire manager can direct attention and business to the box office through a "different" medium. Here's looking forward to more like it.

Buckley Makes Hit With Lobby Display Of Chicken Village



Chris Buckley, owner and manager of the Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, Albany, N. Y., put on an Easter display that they're still talking about up in that neck of the state.

The Hall, as it is affectionately known in Albany, has a spacious lobby—in fact, one of the largest in all New York state, not excepting New York City. Manager Buckley took advantage of this and constructed a miniature village with a population of 175 little chicks. As you will note in the accompanying illustration, there was a "Bantam Garage," a "Leghorn Pharmacy" and of course a "Cackle Theatre," with the attraction billed as "Edna Wallace Hopper, the Eternal Chicken."

The lobby was so attractive that many patrons sought out Mr. Buckley to inform him that even though they saw nothing else, they got their money's worth looking at the lobby display. In fact, many came from the neighboring cities of Troy and Schnectady to view the novel feature.

In addition to the chick village the sides of the lobby were tastefully decorated with Easter flowers, as the other photo shows. But the Big kick came from the penned-in chicks.

We believe that this is one to file away for next Easter season. Of course Manager Buckley was able to carry out his idea on a larger scale than many will be able to do, but the idea is there and it can be reduced to fit the circumstances. We thank two Chrises for the contribution, Chris Buckley and Chris Grant, and hope that the Club will receive more contributions.

When A Pre-View Is Shown In Newbern, Tenn., It's An Event

When a preview is advertised at the Palace Theatre in Newbern, Tenn., it's an event in the town. And when the preview happens to be a Will Rogers film, it's more than an event—it's a combination Christmas, Fourth of July, New Year's Day, Thanksgiving Day, and many other holidays rolled into one.

Which explains why the showman handling the Palace hotfooted it about town to plug Rogers' latest, "A Connecticut Yankee," when it was booked into the house.

Local dealers all agreed to take space in the newspaper that the town boasts. The result was the full-page co-operative ad that we are showing here. You can't deny but that the theatre is plentifully represented on the page. Right? Just another example of how an industrious showman, alert to grab every possible opportunity that presents itself, made the most of this one and turned out some stunts that went over well in the town.

Business was aces on this one. And why not? The showman put in a lot of work to plug the film. Every conceivable angle that his town offers was utilized—and then some. So once again is proven that even if you are located in a small town, there's always ample opportunity for you to get in some Big Town plugs on your shows. We'd like to see some more work from Newbern.

Chaplin Mimics Over-Ran Streets As Part Of Gammett's Stunts

A calliope ground out tunes to tell the residents and theatregoers of Bethlehem, Pa., that Charlie Chaplin's newest, "City Lights," was on display at the local Globe Theatre. The stunt was part of the campaign planned and executed by Harry Gammett, manager of the Globe.

We are showing a photo of a number of the outside ballyhoos that Gammett used in his showselling. In addition to the calliope, a vaudeville and circus team were hired to stunt about the town. Their props were carried about on the auto the pair did the stunts atop. They attracted plenty of attention wherever and whenever they appeared.

Gammett also had another effective street ballyhoo stunt in two men who walked about different sections of the town. The men were dressed in attire similar to that worn by Chaplin. They carried signs on their backs plugging the film. Also note in the photo we are showing the massive cut-out on the facade of the building. This measured 20½ feet in height and 11 feet in width, and attracted considerable comment from many persons in the town.

These few activities were valuable aids in the selling of "City Lights" for Gammett and helped towards the complete box-office success. Well, Harry, we're glad to see that you continue to turn out such ace work on every film that plays your house, and we are sure that it will be continued not only in Bethlehem, but on the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club as well.

Newspaper Readers!

place in your news items everything that you would carry in your ad, but take great care in preparing it, so that it will not find its way into the editor's waste basket, but instead in a prominent position in the paper.

Watch What You Print

If time does not permit you to sit down and think out your own story and you must use a story from the press book, that particular story should be closely analyzed, and all material that might mislead the public should be crossed out. The time when you think you can bluff the public with some hot news about something that is not in the picture, has passed, and the public wants the truth just as much in your theatre news as they would expect to find in any other story of timely interest that paper might publish for the day.

You can still go another step toward the proper preparation of your news story by typing it out on paper; this even applies if you use an item from the press sheet. Type it neatly and double space it. The editor of any paper appreciates copy handed in in this manner, and it will save many an eye strain for the linotype operator when he places your copy into type. Any copy clipped that has already been printed is hard to read, and it is items of this kind that many times end up in the waste basket.

Most any editor of any paper realizes that motion picture news is valuable news, provided, of course, that it is real news. This is evidenced by the fact that motion picture magazines have the largest circulation on magazine stands, and any timely items in the daily press are always welcomed by motion picture fans, especially women readers. But it is up to the individual exhibitor to keep his news real news and not just a lot of hash that might be clipped from some press sheet which was prepared by a press agent who probably wrote the same story for some other picture, merely changing a few words.

SEND IN YOUR ADS!

Every type of town and theatre should be represented in the ad layouts published in the Club section from week to week. If we pass along too many big city ads the small-towners register a kick; and if we make them exclusively small town, the larger city boys raise Cain.

The only happy medium is to get tear sheets from every member's local paper. Then we'll be able to make the selection accordingly.

The average small theatre having to deal with a weekly paper ought to be interested in Paul Kunze's layout which will be published in the very near future. It will show a group of ads wherein the manager had to sell from three to five attractions in one ad. This same condition prevails in so many spots throughout the country that we are expecting plenty of comment after it appears.

Suppose you make it a point to send us copies of your newspaper ads. Start today.

Woman Impersonator Schmidt's Best Gag With 'Charley's Aunt'

When William Schmidt played "Charley's Aunt" at the Publix-Orpheum, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., one of his most effective stunts was a man ballyhoo in woman's attire.

The man was dressed in woman's clothes, woman's hat and wore a wig with long curls reaching to the shoulder. A sign on her back called attention to the title of picture, theatre and playdates.

The ballyhoo attracted lots of attention perhaps due to her smoking a cigar. At any rate, it caused lots of comment and made mighty fine publicity for the picture.

A good gag, Bill—for it does seem that a woman smoking in public will still attract attention.

Non-Film Publicity Works Out Nicely In West Scranton, Pa.

The Comerford-Publix Theatre Corp., in front of one of their theatres in West Scranton, Pa., formally donated a 750,000 candlepower beacon light which formerly shone atop the theatre, to the officials of the Scranton Airport corporation.

John J. Osborne, manager of the West Side Theatre, made the presentation in behalf of George C. Walsh, district manager of the theatre corporation.

The airport concern saves a substantial sum of money as a result of the generosity of the theatre corporation.

Officials of the airport are warm in their praise of the theatre firm and of Mr. Walsh for his keen interest in the welfare of the port.

Once again we rejoice at some form of activity not involving a particular picture. Maybe other smart showmen will take this little story and work out some unique way of making an inexpensive donation or sponsor some worth while gag for their community. Thereby directing much, and valuable, attention towards the theatre.

The Skill of Belasco

SOME way, the world is not the same today. David Belasco is dead. With him definitely has gone a certain era of the American theatre, which began with Charles Frohman, with whom Belasco early was associated. Surviving alone from that period and still valiantly active is William A. Brady. But Broadway, the great white way of the day before neon came, belongs to the stage of the legitimate drama no more. For some 35 years the motion picture has been on its way to the dominance that gleams from every sign on the big broad way tonight.

So now that David is gone, there will never be another Belasco or his like. He was of and for the stage, utterly. It was of his choosing in the days when the young screen beckoned and he loaned only his name. And yet, distantly, off-stage, as lightly poignant as the voice of the singing coureur de bois bound down river, he has been a motion picture influence for the last two decades. The motion picture has always been aware that Belasco was there, always doing something that the screen had not quite attained.

It was David Belasco who decided that Gladys Smith should be known to the world as Mary Pickford, and that was before little Miss Mary had found the screen. And in the years after, when Mistress Mary, quite contrarily had left the stage behind her forever, to join in Adolph Zukor's daring project of famous players in famous plays, the first vehicle chosen for her was Belasco's "A Good Little Devil" and in the prologue of that picture Belasco appeared. It was well near as close as he ever got to the motion picture. His kinship to the stage, his devotion to the technique and traditions of his craft, stood in the way of even a hearty tolerance of that flickering new art of the screen.

It is a bit of a pity, too. For the screen might have done well with the sincere ministrations of Belasco. He brought to the stage, contrary to many a fawning opinion, no great genius, save the genius of hard work. He had no wand of magic, no swift inspired insight. He worked, worked in all sincerity in a trade where sincerity was and is rare. His showmanship was conscious, sometimes obvious, as obvious as the priestliness of his garb and mein, but he worked at it in full faith with himself and the public. David Belasco's business was putting on a show. That he did, and let nothing stand in his way. Masters of the motion picture would do well to strive as singly and sincerely.

Belasco had a special sort of fidelity to the detail of his realism and his unrealism, too. He invested endless personal effort in every creative element of his productions. He had no such words as "good enough." He worked in the main for David Belasco. Also, importantly, he seldom tried to do too many things at once. Had he been in sympathy with the motion picture he might well have been a better producer than the art has yet seen. One can recall with a thrill his labors in trying to make an actor of the golden-voiced Caruso, in an operatic endeavor with "The Girl of the Golden West." It was a noble failure. And there was his amazing triumph in the strenuous evolutionary training of Mrs. Leslie Carter and the magic of those DuBarry lights.

The career of Belasco leaves the traditions of the American stage enriched by substantial endeavor and long-continued success untainted and unscarred in its recording. The Belasco story now ended is a good story.

Warner's Big Split

MR. WALTER WINCHELL of The Daily Mirror (N. Y.) has this week been making a great pother about the discovery of a split infinitive—"to honestly depict"—in the titles of "The Public Enemy." It is rather too bad that there should ever be an error of any kind, any time, anywhere, on the screen or elsewhere. But, after all, a split infinitive never wrecked an industry, and the motion picture operates solely for the purpose of being a decent entertainment for the millions. It is not specifically obligated to maintain the integrity of infinitives. After what Mr. Winchell has done with and to the language it would seem discreet, not to say sporting, of him to be content to commit his own syntax, without this meticulous concern about others.

"Reri" and Mr. Ziegfeld

NOW, as pleasantly announced at a backstage party at the Central Park the other midnight, "Reri," the olive-tinted heroine of "Tabu," is to be one of the principals of Mr. Florenz Ziegfeld's "Follies of 1931." The provocative lady has been brought all these many miles of sea and land from remote Bora-Bora just because Mr. Robert Flaherty's camera and the late Mr. F. W. Murnau's direction brought her image to Broadway and under the eye of opportunity. It is of course time that the film paid a certain obligation.

In the remote year of 1894 the motion picture presented Mr. Ziegfeld's star, Mr. Eugene Sandow, in its first season's product, with so much success that the negative was worn out making prints. It may be noted in passing, however, that while Mr. Sandow's services were given for publicity the first time, there was never a retake to replace the negative because his manager had already discovered that picture appearance meant box-office value. The second time he wanted money for Mr. Sandow. Now the debt is paid, and, after remembering Mr. Sandow and seeing Miss "Reri," perhaps it is really overpaid.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

HOLLYWOOD has a "Whispering Brigade"—tiny but efficient. And this is how it works:

Executive or supervisor, or director, Jones is getting a salary as large as that of the president of the country, but Brown is getting more. And so Jones wants more. His wife, especially, wants more.

Or Jones may be anxious to climb out of the lowly class of six hundred-a-week-men, or the little more aristocratic division of thousands-a-week-men.

So Jones engages a whisperer. He's no ordinary individual—this whisperer. He is clever, circulates a good deal, perhaps is an individual at the Embassy, the Mayfair, and private social gatherings; and his comments are listened to.

He mixes in with a lot of worthwhile people, and when the talk turns to pictures, as it always does, he launches his bomb.

"Do you know," he begins, "who is credited, right now, with the best production brains in Hollywood?"

"No," is the response—cynically, or curiously, or naively, as the case may be.

"Well, I'll tell you—and maybe it will surprise you. Just came back from New York, y'know, and I talked to the bankers there. Say, did you know these bankers know what's what out here? Well, they do. It would surprise you. I think they have scouts out here. Sure, they have.

"Yessir. Well they got their eyes on ——," he whispers.

"No! Really!"

"Yessir. It's a fact. Smart guy, that fellow. Oh, you don't hear so much about him. But he knows. Three studios I could mention have got their feelers out for him. He can pick his own berth—that fellow. Smart guy!"

And so the whisper, placed here and there, goes on and on. And often it works.

Surprising place, this Hollywood.

Straying Into Print

The week's crop of Warner rumor and gossip has been especially abundant, with a deal of unfounded and speculative stories straying into print. Every possible arrangement of the possibilities in the financing and structure of a corporation have been set forth as solemn fact. The net result of inquiry finds no one's mind made up, while some jolly gentlemen of the ticker engage in their diversions with the market. John J. Raskob, reputed holder of a large interest, was reported to be selling in the open market. Meanwhile from tickerland came a tale of buying by an agent of electrical interests. This failed of substantiation.

A Decrepit Law

THE decrepit anti-trust law again has entered the picture in the film business to thwart efforts to conserve resources during a period of depression. In looking about for some logical means of offsetting a drop in grosses during the summer, Publix and RKO executives tentatively sought a pooling plan in certain situations whereby the overseating problem would be solved and subsequent losses eliminated. Under this method of operation profits would be prorated. When it appeared that the plan would be feasible, with a possibility that two other circuits might join in the movement, the legal lights of Publix and RKO arose to announce a definite "No!" It is understood that Publix and RKO sent representatives to Washington to confer with agents of the department of justice, the outcome of which was anything but encouraging for the pooling plan. Therefore, its immediate adoption is hardly probable. Omaha and Des Moines were the two localities in which immediate relief was sought.

Sarnoff in Hollywood

David Sarnoff's visit to Hollywood is something new in film annals. It is two-and-a-half years now since Radio bought F. B. O. During this time some $7,000,000 has been expended in studio development and generally Radio Pictures has taken its place among the major companies.

And Sarnoff is just coming out to look over the works.

One recalls the president of a prominent film company who left for Hollywood the moment he was elected—or, rather, thought he was elected. When he had presumably regulated the studios and rushed back to New York he found that he was fired before he had been hired.

Most people would like to have his inside idea of pictures. But, man of the calibre he is, he would probably reply: "I am not a picture producer."

THE effect of double featuring on short subject sales where the practice is in effect on an extensive scale is shown in the financial report of a Midwest exchange. Average short subject sales by this exchange have amounted to $325,000 annually. Sales this year were $175,000, or an average weekly decrease of $3,000 for the year.

Not Yet, But Soon

A well known director was crossing the studio lot in Hollywood the other day when he met one of the executives.

"How's the picture coming, my boy?" inquired the executive in a smilingly paternal way.

"All finished," the director replied.

"So? All finished," said the executive.

"All finished and ready to send to New York," repeated the director.

"And no relapses?" inquired the executive!

A Clog in the Wheels

A young German director who has had success in the picture industry in this country and abroad, recently gave birth to an idea which presents a new method of making pictures. This new method is based upon a very unusual style of story telling. The camera is apparently one of the actors and this helps give an entirely new slant in developing the story. Besides this the cost in producing pictures under this new method is much less than methods now in use.

The director first contacted one of the larger studios and told them of his idea. Associate producers conferred upon the possibilities it offered and recommended it to the production executive. His leaving for a long trip held up developments there and the director took the idea to another studio where it was at once picked as a winner and plans were made for trial tests.

When all was set for making the tests the studio manager in one of his customary "smart-Alec" moods refused to sign the requisitions for use of stages, material, etc. He claimed the studio wasn't interested—and got away with it because the big boss was out of town for a few weeks. The upshot of it all is that the studio is losing a chance to promote an idea which undoubtedly will be worth many thousands of dollars to them, all through the stupidity of one employee who is graced with a little authority and likes to use it to every advantage.

FINANCING PLANS WILL NOT ALTER CLARKE'S STATUS AS HEAD OF FOX

That Turn in the Road

"Nothing would give me greater pleasure at this time than to be able to forecast an immediate return to prosperity," declared Sam Katz, Publix chief, in a message to managers of company theatres.

"In all honesty, I cannot do it," he continued. "There is no use kidding ourselves. We are not half-grown boys, but mature, seasoned men and we should look things squarely in the face. As I see it, we have not as yet come to the turn in the road. There is still a hard pull ahead of us."

Managers Told Present Chiefs Remain Intact

"Gossip, Rumors, Intrigue, Malicious Conjecture Must Be Stamped Out," Operators Warned

Fox interests this week declared war on the gossip purveyors and "politicians" who have ulterior motives!

In a scathing denunciation of politic players, which emanated from headquarters and appeared in "The Last Word," Fox Theatres publication, managers were told that "Harley L. Clarke is, and will continue to be, the president of this organization."

This follows rumors which have recently been given widespread circulation in the industry crediting a change in the top-rank executive personnel of the Fox companies.

"No More Politics!" is the official edict which goes forth to every person working for the theatre unit. "Every person, in no matter what capacity or position, from executives right down to the porters!"

The message admits that the declaration is "pretty strong language, and more frank than what might be ex-

Television Will Be Minor Factor At S.M.P.E. Meet

Only one paper on television will be presented at the semi-annual convention of the Society of M. P. Engineers, which starts in Hollywood on Monday. A total of 70 papers will be read to industry engineers and technicians, and the subject matter of these treatises are usually accepted as a barometer of the trend in motion picture advancement as it relates to the technician's laboratory. The lone television paper, therefore, gives some indication of lack of activity in that field.

Color is more prominently displayed in the papers' lineup than was expected. Seven discussions will be held on this branch of industry.

Raw stock and laboratory practice is occupying more attention of technicians than any other phases, judging from the 24 papers scheduled to be read at the meeting.

There will be ten papers on general studio practice, 11 relating to general theatre practice and nine having to do with sound recording developments.

Non-theatrical, optics, scientific films and a discussion of foreign activities conclude the group.

Exhibitor Allowed to Cancel Film For Each Roadshow

Theatre owners are advised by the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pa., that "for each picture which the distributor takes out of your contract for roadshow, you have the right to exclude one other picture from your contract, by giving written notice not later than 14 days prior to your play date."

10% of Gross Is New Maximum for Fox Theatre Ads

Beginning at once, theatres of the Fox circuit will not be permitted to spend for their advertising budget more than 10% of the house's average gross.

This 10% maximum must include all charges for publicity salaries, newspaper space, lobby displays and art work, trailers and all other items of any description for advertising, exploitation and publicity.

In the cases of theatres which depend on newspaper ads, the proportion of 7% for newspapers and 3% for all other advertising, exploitation and publicity items, is suggested by home office officials as being ideal.

It is suggested that outdoor advertising be cut where a house is over the 10% line.

Paramount Publix Reduces Salaries

Effective June 1, Paramount Publix Corp. will reduce salaries, on a sliding scale, ranging downward from 30 per cent at the top through 25, 15 and 10 per cent. No indication has been given by Paramount of what application this policy might find in the West Coast production organization.

Schwartz Takes Eleven Houses In Metropolitan Area From Fox

Eleven Fox theatres of the circuit's Metropolitan division, in Brooklyn and Long Island, were purchased yesterday by A. H. Schwartz, of Century Theatres, who operates a string in the New York City territory.

BOOST FOR SHORTS AS EXHIBITORS SLASH DOUBLE BILLS FOR SUMMER

Summer Reductions of Program Playing Time Are Now Being Effected by a Return to Single Feature with Definite Trend to Using and Advertising Variety of Shorts

The double feature "evil," over which the industry has worried considerably in recent months, is about to terminate—temporarily at least.

Approaching summer months and resultant warm weather has brought about beginning of the end of this practice which is admitted to be economically unsound by distributor and exhibitor, but which both have been unable to halt because of the terrific competitive battle, particularly between neighborhood theatres, which has been waged over this "much-abused factor."

Close observers of the situation are of the opinion that once checked by summer policies, the double bill will generally continue dormant when warm weather passes.

Summer operating policies being put into effect throughout the country apparently recognize the difficulty of selling patrons a double feature program during hot weather. Reductions in over-size programs are now being made in all towns—key and otherwise—and the major result of the change is to give short subject bookings their first break in months. The usual double feature program reduces or excludes entirely the short subject. Summer reductions of program playing time are now being effected by a return to a single feature, with a definite trend to using and advertising a variety of short subjects as the "bargain" feature of the program.

Numerous exhibitors report that the change has shown an immediate box office response. Shorts were minimized or neglected in many neighborhoods for so long a time that exhibitors in such locations discover, now that they are spotting them in their programs once more, that the short feature has come to be a novelty that patrons will pay to see.

Houses intent upon cutting running time before warm weather sets in are now the major short feature users. Advertising of four to six short subjects in place of the discarded extra feature is becoming daily more common. Other houses that are still unwilling to quit double featuring even for the summer months are booking minimum length features and playing short subjects in addition.

A third impetus to short subject play dates is the approach of the new buying season and the desire of most exhibitors to meet it with a clean contract slate. Exhibitors who have fallen behind on short subject play dates during the height of the double featuring season are now being faced with the necessity of giving dates to their unplayed shorts before buying next year's product.

The release, current or impending, of several of the year's outstanding box office attractions has also been a means of obtaining short subject play dates from lax exhibitors within recent weeks.

The total result of these factors is the most active short subject market many exchanges have seen since early last fall. Their combined effect may be sufficient to bring an almost disastrous situation, locally, back to a normal for the year, before it is over.

Flinn and Lally Trial Postponed

Trial in New York of John C. Flinn and Henry F. Lally, charged with second degree manslaughter in connection with the fire at the Pathe Sound Studios, was indefinitely postponed on Thursday, May 21.

The trial was postponed when Nathan Burkan, defense counsel, informed General Sessions Judge Levine that Supreme Court Justice Frankenthaler had not yet passed on a writ of habeas corpus.

Sue Universal for $1,350,000 Claiming Contract Overcharge

A $1,350,000 damage suit filed against Universal in the United States district court at Boston by the American Feature Films Company, charges Universal with overcharges to that amount on contracts for exclusive distribution rights in Great Britain.

The contracts were dated 1919 and 1923, the complaint states, overcharges on features amounting to $1,000,000 and on shorts $350,000.

Forget the $

Major circuits are warning house managers to use care in the handling of stunts on Decoration Day, May 30.

One order points out that "Decoration Day is religiously observed throughout the nation. It is a day of serious thought, a day sanctified. We remind you of this in order that you will restrain any ambitious endeavor which might savor of commercializing this particular holiday.

"There are many whose loss has been so recent that the mere overstepping of the bounds of propriety would result in serious criticism. In other words we encourage the cancelling of any stunt which even the most fastidious observer might construe as bordering upon the line of commercialization."

Fox Managers to Talk with Chiefs On All Problems

Fox West Coast Theatres, following action of the Eastern division, will give to managers an opportunity to confer each month with division managers and the company executives on the status of his particular operation.

The new system will not allow for general meetings, but provides for a written recapitulation of the past month's activities and gives the operators the chance to voice opinion on those factors which need rectification in this particular house.

Discussion will be centered around general operation, fixed charges, possible admission price changes, advertising budget, staff, changes in opening days, etc.

"Personal Artillery" Ruled Out in Gang Film Ballyhoo

"Please don't let the characters in newspaper ads and lobby ballyhoo tote personal artillery." This advertising policy has been adopted by Fox Theatres.

Chicago censors can't make up their minds about Warners' "Public Enemy" and Tiffany-World Wide's "Hell Bound." Looks like both gang pictures are in for serious cutting.

BRITISH LOOK FOR AMERICAN AID TO ALLEVIATE PRODUCT SHORTAGE

London "Puts One Over" on the U.S.A., Thanks to "Oft-Despised British Film"

Screeching headlines in London's "Evening News," which seem to chuckle a-loud at the "big cinema slump" in the United States, boastfully tell of having "put one over on the U. S!"

"That oft-despised article—the British film" is given unstinted praise for bolstering up the British film industry to the point of uncontrollable prosperity.

Apparently, the "Evening News," (which modestly takes credit for having the largest evening net sale in the world) is unaware of the present unhealthy economic situation prevalent in English film circles, and knows nothing of a shortage of feature product which, unless aided by American producers, seriously threatens the British trade during the coming season.

"America," the News states, "has never known a worse slump in the cinema business than is being experienced just now," which may or may not be true, but the paper's statement which points out that British "exhibitors cannot get enough" English-made talkers appears to be questionable, particularly in view of the fact that old John Bull must depend on a quota law to force British exhibitors to show British-made product! The quota insists upon the showing of only 10% of British films in a year, and it's no secret that hundreds of theatre owners in England believe that's too much. Furthermore, considerable Hollywood talent has been imported at various times by London producers to enhance the box office value of British product.

Will Hays Gang Yarn Edict Kills Gaumont Plans

Griffith Was Slated to Direct Wallace Crook Yarn Until the Decision Came to End Cycle

By W. H. MOORING, London

Will Hays' "No more gangster films" order drops a monkey-wrench into the works in London. For months, Gaumont, through its production subsidiaries, Gainsborough and British Lion, had been planning to break into the American market with the Edgar Wallace gang vehicles.

Will H. Hays

They had figured that if his gangster yarns and his crook mysteries were properly filmed, with possibly a big American name or two among directors or cast, they would break in on the popularity of this cycle.

Now they will have to start planning all over again, for just as they were all set for D. W. Griffith to come to London to make "On the Spot" as a joint Gainsborough-British Lion effort, Hays has said the doxology on crime.

One thing is certain about British films: there is going to be a big shortage in the next quota year unless Fox, Radio, Paramount and M-G-M get going with full steam ahead.

D. W. Griffith

At the moment, Paramount is making Michael Arlen's "These Charming People," with Cyril Maude and Godfrey Tearle as the draw. Bobbie Kane has others on the tapis, and his company is all set with a three-year option on the use of the British and Dominion (W. E. equipped) studios at Elstree, London.

But speed is essential if the greater number is to be adequate. It is held to be of no use making cheap quota films just to make legal footage any longer.

At first when the quota stood at only five per cent it didn't represent any worth-while percentage of American renters' total output, and the law doesn't compel them to sell quota product, but only to offer it.

When in the early future the quota provides for a 10 per cent figure, exhibitors' demand will represent a total of some importance. Therefore, it might be well if other U. S. companies got going with worthwhile British productions.

Fox Trailer Reports Differ Widely On the Value of Ads

Various reports reaching Fox's home office on the trailer situation differ widely as to the value of the screen picture advertising. Some insist the trailer is unessential, others believe the patron resents the advertising on his entertainment bill.

Still others record that the trailers are decidedly boring and do nothing to sell the product. On the other hand, there are statements which claim the circuit would be deep in the red if it were not for the trailers.

Twin Cities Owners Favor Plans for a Buying Group

At a conference of Minneapolis and St. Paul exhibitors, plans were discussed for a buying organization of independent owners in the twin cities, with either a committee or a paid purchasing agent in charge.

Designed to secure more favorable deals for owners, the plan was reported by Al Steffes, heading the Allied unit, to have met with great favor among exhibitors.

Exhibitors Not Bothered by Golf But Night Ball Hurts

Miniature golf courses have ceased to worry San Francisco exhibitors, since most opened last year are closed, and others are doing poor business.

Night baseball, however, has started, and is drawing large crowds, with women admitted free.

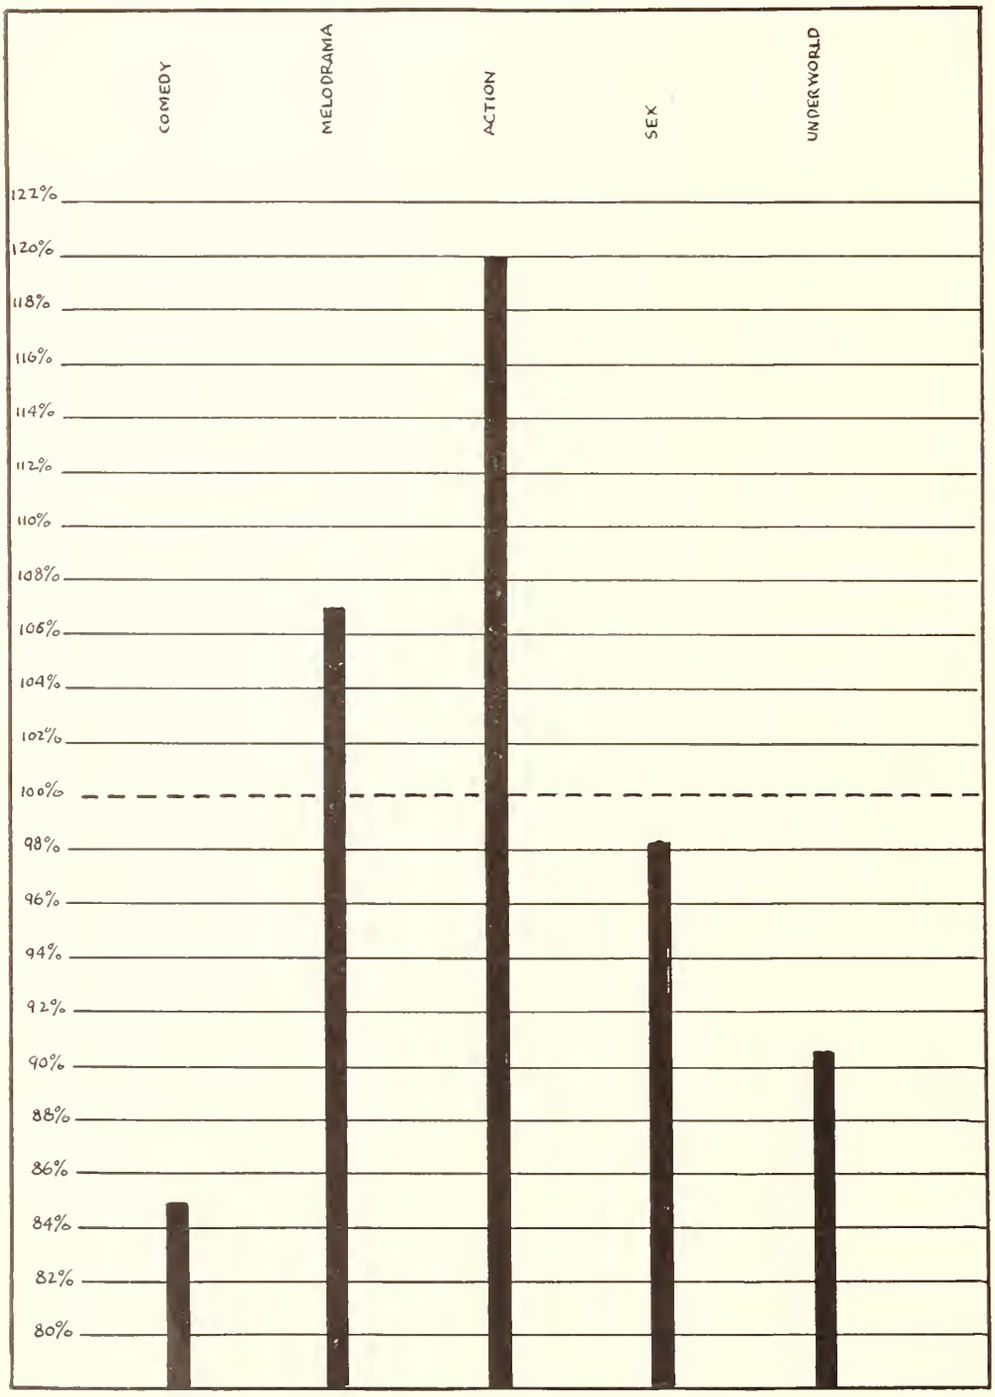
Arliss at Antivivisectionist Meeting While in Chicago

George Arliss spent a part of his Chicago "lay-over" at a meeting of the National Association of Antivivisectionists, while here en route to his vacation in England. Arliss, as famous in some circles as a friend of animals as he is in others as a great character actor, confessed that his favorite avocation is prevention of cruelty to animals.

In interviews here, Arliss stated that costume plays were only unpopular when poorly acted or when based on inferior stories.



Supply Dealers Meet Switched To Chicago on July 25-26

Affiliated Theatre Supply Dealers will convene at Chicago July 25-26 for their annual meeting. This revokes an earlier decision of the organization to meet in Kansas City on the same dates.

The "Herald" Aids Theatres

Fox West Coast Theatres, in an official order, has requested all houses of that organization to subscribe to Motion Picture Herald, "in the belief that the careful reading" of this trade paper "is of extreme value to every manager on the circuit."

ACTION PICTURES LEAD FIELD

The honor for popularity with audiences of the country goes to the action picture, according to a survey of box office receipts just made by Motion Picture Herald in 30 cities for the months of January, February, March and April. Melodrama ranks second, with the sex picture dropping into third position. Underworld and comedy entertainment follow in that order. Action pictures drew a gross 20 per cent above the average for that period, while sex films dropped 2 per cent below average. Comedy hit a low mark of 15 per cent below.

Artists' Representatives and Managers. At present, there are 13 member companies and other established licensed agents are being invited to join.

The purposes of the organization, as listed in the charter, are "to maintain and advance high ethical standards in the conduct of the business of motion picture artists' representatives and managers, and to foster better understanding among persons engaged in such business." It is a voluntary, unincorporated, non-profitable association. The officers are:

Booking, Buying Conferences Aid Managers and Exchanges

Publix Theatres' recent innovation of holding booking and buying conferences attended by theatre and exchange managers has effected a closer understanding of distribution problems by theatre men in the field with a resulting impetus toward an amicable and sympathetic relation between them and the exchanges, according to Sam Dembow, Jr., of Publix.

Allied and Hanson Now Set On Kinograms News Release

Final contractual details have been consummated, clearing the way for the Allied deal with Oscar Hanson and Kinograms for a twice weekly sponsored ad-newsreel release for Allied member theatres. Abram F. Myers and Al Steffes concluded the deal for Allied. Initial release is due next month, with approximately 2,000 theatres on the books for the news release.

Lisbon Junks Shorts Policy

Libson's Star, a 290-seater in the heart of Cincinnati's business district, has abandoned policy of 40-minute showing of shorts and newsreels at 10 cents, and is continuing former policy of full length pictures of earlier releases at 15 cents. The innovation, it is understood, failed to click.

Professor Fisher Rises to Remark On 115,000,000

Professor Irving Fisher, the Yale economist and statistician, denies most emphatically the authorship of the much quoted figure of "115,000,000 patrons" of the screen in the United States, in a letter written to

Motion Picture Herald from his study in New Haven. This figure, so decidedly questioned in a recent editorial in the Herald, appears to have no proper parentage, although it has been given circulation from high places. The Herald editorial in question gave rise to Professor Fisher's letter, which follows:

My attention has been called to an editorial in your issue of April 25 entitled "Guess Work and Statistics." In this editorial you say that I am supposed to be responsible for the statement "that there are 115,000,000 box-office patrons of the motion picture in the United States. It is most obvious that in a population of say 125,000,000 persons there are enough of the infantile and the extreme aged, to say nothing about those to whom the motion picture is geographically inaccessible, to make that figure preposterous.

Your editorial seems to assume that I stated that 115,000,000 different individuals in the United States were regular patrons of the movies. Of course I never made any such preposterous statement. I did, in a newspaper release of February 24, 1930, make use of the figures estimated by Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., which estimated the weekly attendance on motion picture at 115,000,000. If you mean by "box-office patrons," weekly attendance, then the figure you declare to be preposterous was the estimate of the organization of Mr. Will H. Hays, who is often referred to as the Dictator in Moviedom.

In the Financial Analysis Service, Section D, for March 2, 1931, the statistical organization founded by me made an analysis of the motion picture industry in which they used a revised and more conservative estimate by Mr. Hays' organization. I enclose for your information a copy of Section D. You will find on page 2 the chart showing the tremendous growth in attendance on motion pictures from 1922 to 1930 as estimated by Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

Because of the implication that I am responsible for the figures of motion picture patronage, I ask that you publish my explanation.

Sincerely yours,

Irving Fisher.

Possibly the spectral figure of 115,000,000 can now be considered to have been laid away to rest. Careful investigation fails to find any real authority for it. Like a rumor, it came from nowhere, but it grew up to go to Yale, and die of it.

Echoes of the Past

Producers may forget the old favorites of the silent screen, but it appears the public does not. When "Young Sinners" opened at Loew's State, Los Angeles, the first appearance of Thomas Meighan upon the screen was greeted with a spontaneous outburst of applause.

"School and Screen" Will Improve Child Attendance and Encourage Better Films

In an official order from Fox West Coast Theatres' headquarters in Los Angeles, the circuit's managers are urged to make use of the "School and Screen" department in Motion Picture Herald.

"Believing that the time has come when a national campaign for the coordination of school and screen will bring profitable results, Motion Picture Herald has established a 'School and Screen' department for the purpose of selecting outstanding pictures each month and printing a brief authoritative resume for teachers," the Fox managers were told.

"This resume," continues the company message, "will contain a series of helpful questionnaires for free distribution in schools among children. The first of this series appeared on pages 61, 62 and 63 of the April 11th issue of that publication.

"The article explaining the advantages of the 'School and Screen' tieup cites the fact that for the past two years there has been a growing consciousness among educators everywhere of the important relationship of the sound screen to the class room. Visual education has sprung to the foreground in pedagogic discussions.

"Pictures such as 'Trader Horn,' 'Cimarron,' 'Rango,' 'The Painted Desert,' 'Fighting Caravans,' and 'Connecticut Yankee,' if properly handled, offer fine opportunities for stimulating juvenile patronage. What do schools know about these pictures? A percentage of school children will see these pictures, some because they are attracted by the title, others just because it is a movie.

"But do the children know and understand the historical, geographical and educational value? An historical or educational picture contains items of interest to both children and their teachers and it is the manager's duty to stress them. Not only does it affect the box-office, but it creates a feeling of good will among persons of all ages as well as a great amount of word-of-mouth advertising.

"Three valuable results are obtainable through the medium of this plan: It will encourage school pupils to attend the theatres where such pictures are playing; will bring new vitality and discussion into the class room, and it will encourage the production of a better grade of pictures.

"There seems to be no reason why this plan cannot be successful. When you get a picture along these lines either pick up the questionnaires that are published in Motion Picture Herald or make up your own list. Read the story, form your own opinions as to adaptability of the plan in your territory and, if you can, go out and make your theatre a subject of class room discussion."

Cinema Patents and Craft Have Until June 29 for Briefs

Suit of Cinema Patents, in which H. J. Yates and Consolidated Film Industries are interested, against Nat Saland's Craft Film Laboratories, alleging patent violations on developing machines, will continue at Wilmington U. S. District Court on June 29 when both will file briefs with certain facts of law.

The taking of testimony was completed last week before Judge John P. Nields, at the Wilmington court.

More London Show Houses

Plans are well advanced for the demolition of the London Pavilion on Piccadilly Circus—heart of London's show world—and the substitution of a 4,000-seat theatre. The Pavilion has been used for the past three years, partly for stage, and partly screen shows. But it is hopelessly out of date, never having been altered structurally since the '80's. A. E. Abrahams, financier, is backing the project, and John Maxwell is associated with him.

Abrahams is also planning a huge theatre near Piccadilly proper.

Another site in Coventry street—between Piccadilly Circus and Leicester Square—is now being bid for by several, including Radio, Paramount, Gaumont, Maxwell and Schenck.

Beauty Ad Stills Sell Merchants

Latest trend in commercial publication advertising—the placing of a picture of some well-known beauty, preferably a screen star, in the copy, which now is being done by radio, automobile and other manufacturers, provides theatre managers with one of the finest sales talks possible when on a hunt for free advertising for his theatre, according to A. M. Botsford of Publix.

PICTURE STOCKS HIT RECORD LOWS

Decline Comparatively Moderate, But Persistent Deflation Put Leaders Into New Lows

By THE ANALYIST

Contending with a generally weak stock market and heavy pressure against one or two issues of their own group, motion picture shares on the New York Stock Exchange dropped to new record lows during the past week. In a market in which such prime investment issues as U. S. Steel and American Can broke through their previous resistance levels on the downside to new lows, the decline in most of the picture stocks was comparatively moderate, but, as a result of the recent persistent deflation in the market, it took only relatively small recessions to put the leading film shares into new low ground.

Intermittent rallies punctured the downward movement when the bear interest in various issues became overcrowded and was forced to cover, but as soon as the short lines were pulled in selling was resumed and the recoveries proved merely technical. However, in only one or two sessions did the selling in picture shares assume important proportions, due to savage bear attacks against Warner Brothers, and none of the heavy liquidation that swept over some other sections of the list was in evidence in the majority of film shares.

Warner Brothers was forced down to 4¾, a record low, on a wave of selling that was accompanied by a number of rumors regarding the company's affairs. However, none of these reports was new and pressure against the stock was based largely on expectation of a very unfavorable showing in the earnings report to be issued within about a week.

Fox was taken for a stock market ride on reports that the earnings for 1930, to be announced around the 25th, will not cover the $4 annual dividend. The company report is expected to show a net equal to about $3.71 a share, while, under the system of amortization used by the bankers' auditors, the figure will be revised downward considerably.

Weakness in these two issues unsettled the entire group of amusement shares and some of the recent withstanders of the general trend gave ground, including RKO, Eastman Kodak, Paramount and Loew's, all except the latter selling off to new lows. In view of the weakness in Fox, the action of General Theatres was very favorable and the issue held steady around 4 throughout the week following publication of the 1930 earnings report.

A severe break in Warner Brothers' 6s and subsequent recovery of about half the loss featured trading in amusement bonds. On the Curb Exchange Columbia Pictures and Fox Theatres touched new lows, the former reacting to the general weakness, while the latter reflected action for Fox shares on the Big Board. Columbia is reported as having earned the entire year's dividend in the first half of its fiscal year and the stock's decline has been attributed only to general market conditions.

A Scoop!

Bell Telephone's activities in developing its exclusive system of two-way television this week embraced another new phase of operation when it invaded the trade paper field in the first television press interview on record. P. L. Thomson and Walter Eberhardt, of Western Electric, were interviewed by Maurice Kann, "Motion Picture Daily," and James P. Cunningham, for "Motion Picture Herald."

The discussion further amplified the impracticability of widespread usage by means of telephone wires for television because of the unusually large number of telephone circuits necessary to obtain a large-size picture of sufficient clarity.

The device called the Iconophone, simultaneously broadcasts both ways, a picture three by five inches, and despite its small size, seven regular 'phone channels are necessary.

The scientists have completed their job only partially.

Continuous Type Camera, Projector Appear on Coast

The introduction of a new, "continuous-type" camera and projector, perfected at Hollywood by Gabriel Gracia Moreno, Mexican engineer, who claims his invention will do away with the jerky action in film projections, thereby eliminating any eye strain caused by the reflection on the screen, was made here this week.

The camera will be known as the Moreno-Snyder camera, manufactured by Moreno-Cine Corp., Los Angeles.

Financing of the invention was brought about by Silas E. Snyder who claims that Moreno is the first to perfect a continuous movement camera and projector which is scientifically sound and practical for all commercial purposes.

Moreno, who began experimenting with a projection machine at the age of 12, constructed a projector on a radically new theory. He later became a bank manager in Mexico, finally giving up this work to return to his experiments.

While the camera is designed on a new principle for talking pictures, it nevertheless uses the standard film. The continuous principle makes the new instruments non-competitive, it was said.

"The basic principle of all apparatus for the taking and projection of pictures has been the intermittent movement," Moreno explained. "This new type of camera and projector employs a continuous movement, the film passing through the aperture gate at continuous, uniform speed and without friction."

Features of the new instruments include the "exposemeter" or mechanical eye, a photo-electric cell which registers on a scale the actinic value of the light being used, whether it be natural, artificial or a combination of both.

For slow motion photography, the new camera is capable of a film speed of approximately 300 frames per second or 1,125 feet per minute. The camera is also silent, having no noises which would carry through sound microphones.

Both the cameras and projectors will be manufactured in Hollywood, Snyder said.

Mexico Plans Film City; Will Distribute in S. A.

Mexico will have its own producing center if plans for a film city materialize. "Empire City," sometimes called the "Hollywood" of Mexico, is already being constructed, with one building already occupied.

Jack Lustberg of New York is production manager. Production is expected to begin in June, with distribution throughout the Spanish-speaking countries, and Mexican colonies in Southwestern United States.

Tax of $300 to $350 Imposed On Features Sent Into Ireland

Kinematograph Renters' Society has called a special meeting in London to consider the new tax imposed on talkers by the "Chancellor of the Exchequer" of the Irish Free State in this year's budget. He has ordered a tax of 3d. per linear foot on film imports and is lightening the burden of entertainment tax in regard to legitimate theatres. The trade assumes that this represents a charge of $300 to $350 each for every film of average feature length and there is a tremendous outcry throughout the trade against what is considered to be discrimination against films.

It is held that religious bias in Ireland against films generally has in various ways, notably in connection with customs and censorship questions, hampered the progress of the film business in Irish territory.

Fox Los Angeles Theatres To Go On Air In Weekly Program

A regular weekly schedule of radio broadcasts has been set for the Los Angeles Fox houses, after home office exploitation department tests.

Other Changes in London to Follow Warner Shakeup

The news that Arthur Clavering had resigned managing-directorship of Warner Bros. in England burst upon the trade with dramatic suddenness. Probable reason for the shake-up of Warner personnel is to tighten relations between Warner and First National group in that country. H. A. Bandy, former foreign manager, succeeds Clavering, with D. E. Griffiths, general manager of First National-Pathe appointed, also as co-director of Warner. Griffiths is likely to have a big hand in the supervision of the Warner outfit in London, but it is an open secret that over the past two years returns have not been satisfactory to American headquarters.

These changes have revived rumors long current that two other prominent London officers of American distributors are marked for substantial alterations in personnel. The names of Radio and Paramount have been much used in this connection.

Paramount to Raise Number Of Pictorials with Demand

Paramount will attempt to increase the number of its Pictorial shorts during the coming season, though reports that the number will be raised to 26 shortly and in September to 52, are denied by Emanuel Cohen, in charge of short subject production.

The increase in the number will depend entirely on the demand for the Pictorial, Cohen stated. The 1931-32 schedule calls for 13 issues.

System for Simplifying Seating Used in Blockout Floor Plan

BLOCKOUT ELIMINATES CONFUSION IN SEATING

House Filled From Back to Front Which Eliminates Annoying Shifting of Patrons

Creation of a blockout system by Manager Roger H. Dawson, of the Fox Strand, Milwaukee, and his chief of service, designed for the seating of patrons by filling the house from back to front to eliminate confusion, has resulted in increased efficiency and good will.

The purpose of operating, as shown by the accompanying chart, is to overcome the habit of patrons moving from one place in the theatre to another and also makes it easy to sell front section seats. By filling each group of sections according to their popular choice or numerical order of the chart, the house is filled from rear to front center, entirely across the theatre.

During holdouts, those not wishing to wait are offered the front seats and upon being escorted into the house they find the seats filled solid down to the row being sold in the lobby.

The operation avoids arguments and eliminates the continual disturbance caused by patrons making others rise to find single or double seats in any one row other than the section being worked.

This systematic seating arrangement, using either a full crew of nine men which the Strand uses, or a part crew of four men, operates in the following manner, and is illustrated by the various numbers on the chart of this page.

Sections of the floor are numbered and patrons are seated two at a time in running order. For example sections number one and two are filled from three aisles. Sections five and six are filled by aisles two and four and by the cross-over man interchanging from aisle one to aisle five. As the patrons enter the theatre they are divided into five groups, group one going to aisle two; group two to aisle three; group three to aisle four; group four to aisle four and then to aisle five, and group five from aisle two and then to aisle one.

How System Works

The cross-over man fills aisles one and five and then fills the outside aisles with every fourth and fifth party, thereby filling the house solid from back to front center entirely across the theatre.

The cross-over man also picks out all the singles and those not heeding the director's order so that no man is left standing looking for a seat. Singles and stragglers are approached by the cross-over man and escorted to a seat immediately. The effect of the plan is a wedge building to the front center aisles.

Each patron is handled in a courteous, military manner and seated immediately. No arguments arise about seats as each patron is offered the best remaining seat in the theatre.

This seating arrangement can be utilized in virtually any theatre, no matter how large or small the capacity. If a theatre has a balcony, this plan may be placed in operation there also.

Plans of RKO, Publix Pool in Des Moines Are Reported

The RKO and Publix pool reported in Des Moines includes turning the Orpheum into a straight picture house, and the Orpheum, Des Moines and Strand will show first run, with the Paramount playing RKO vaude. The report has been denied by Barry Burke, Publix manager and Jesse Day, Orpheum manager.

Business circles report the tieup as due to a coup which left a new RKO house without pictures, when it was ready to open.

Meridian Firm Sued for $45,000

A suit involving $45,000 has been filed in the circuit court of Lauderdale county at Meridian, Miss., by Levi Rothenberg against Plaza Amusement Co. The suit involves notes alleged to have fallen due since the plaintiff's suit was filed on a lease contract against the defendant company for the house and which was won by the plaintiff in a recent decision of the state supreme court, affirming the lower court action.

Law Protects Stage Actors

The California legislature has passed a measure protecting actors from prosecution for engaging in indecent shows until they have been warned by court order. This follows similar action in New York state.

$4,454,405 Net Earned by Gen'l Theatres in '30

A large increase in total assets, announcement of new product and an optimistic statement by Harley L. Clarke on the future outlook highlighted the annual report of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., issued this week.

Net income of the company, after all charges, amounted to $4,454,405. In 1929, net income was $2,140,023, including operations of subsidiaries for the full year. The 1929 actual report, with profits of subsidiaries deducted prior to acquisition, showed earnings of $940,296. The 1930 earnings, after providing for accrued dividends on preferred stock, amounted to $2.23 a share earned on the 1,892,608 shares of new common stock that will be outstanding when exchange for old common shares is completed. Allowing for a full year's dividend requirements on the new preferred stock which was outstanding only one month of last year, the balance would equal 85 cents a share on the new common.

On the 2,838,913 shares of old common stock the net income was equal to $1.57 a share. This stock in 1929 earned $1.72 a share.

Increased earnings resulting from the Fox Film acquisition in April, 1930, was marked in the report. Dividends received on holdings of Fox stock amounted to $4,939,656, consisting of $4,806,600 on Class A and $210,404 on Class B.

Net operating earnings of General Theatres, before taxes, amounted to $1,460,080, while income from 50% of the profits of Grandeur, Inc., was $67,213 and interest was $141,577. Deduction of expenses of General Theatres, amounting to $286,139, was made from the "other income" account.

Depreciation charges for 1930 showed an increase over 1929, amounting to $251,060 and $231,925, respectively. Interest on unfunded debt totaled $467,247 and total fixed charges were $1,945,331.

As a result of the acquisition of Fox Film Corp. and Fox Theatres Corp., total assets of General Theatres at the end of 1930 amounted to $129,094,728, as compared with $110,389,213 at the end of 1929, according to the balance sheet accompanying the annual report.

Capital assets showed the major gains, land, buildings, equipment and patent rights showing increases, while investments rose from $48,012,635 at the end of 1929 to $62,167,976 at the end of 1930 as a result of the year's operations.

Current assets were lower, amounting to $9,732,638, against $10,521,352 at the end of 1929, while there was a considerable increase in current liabilities, which at the end of 1930 totaled $6,628,109, compared with $2,307,653 on December 31, 1929.

Prospects of new financing by General Theatres to meet maturity of two loans advanced by bankers to the company for the purchase of Fox stock and preferred stock of the recently-formed Film Securities Corp. were revealed by the appearance of a "special loan" item in the balance sheet.

The original loan, secured by 500,000 shares of Fox Film stock, has been extended from April 10 to September 27, and a second block of Fox stock, it is learned, has been offered as collateral by General Theatres for the $10,000,000 loan recently extended by the bankers in connection with the Film Securities Corp. stock deal. Maturity of the second loan is not known.

Commenting on the annual report, Harley L. Clarke, president of General Theatres,

Clarke Continues As Fox President, Managers Told

pected. But it's necessary," states the order, which follows in full:

"Harley L. Clarke is, and will continue to be, the president of this organization. Whatever plans are being worked out for the financing of the group of companies which he heads will not alter his status.

"He himself is taking a directing hand in these financial arrangements and they in no manner involve either his voluntary or involuntary separation from this and our affiliated companies.

"Oscar S. Oldknow is, and will continue to be, the executive vice-president of Fox West Coast Theatres. He returned to Los Angeles with positive assurance that he shall continue in that post for a long time to come. By virtue of his position he is delegated with the full and sole authority to represent Clarke and the stockholders of our organization.

Oscar S. Oldknow

"Rumor Mongers, Politicians Known"

"As for the rest of us—all of us—our jobs collectively and individually consist of delivering to the company what the stockholders have a right to expect of us.

"And our first duty is loyalty to the organization. Fox West Coast Theatres is going to go on.

"Its executives are not going to be changed. And those of us who do the right thing are going to go on. But they who plot and scheme, spread false rumors and start malicious ones, are going to destroy themselves.

"Let's have a few more facts. The management of this circuit is not unaware of certain circumstances. It knows who is starting some of the rumors. It knows who the politicians are and it knows their ambitions.

"It knows where certain 'dynasties' have been built up within the organization—to serve certain individuals and not the organization.

"It knows what certain groups are working together against the good of the organization as a whole for what is nothing less than the glorification of a few, and it knows what groups are working against each other for the same reason.

"There is no need to mention names. Turn the light into your own soul and you will identify yourself.

"Hang Together or Be Hanged Singly"

"The politicians among us are known. Their schemes are known. Let them not be over confident of themselves because they have been tolerated. They will destroy themselves—they are already destroying themselves—without interference from the management.

"This organization is old enough to have a history and a tradition. Look back over its record and you will note a remarkable thing: again and again men in high positions and low have destroyed themselves and have disappeared from its activities because they have sought, through politics, to pull more out of Fox West Coast Theatres than they put into it; again and again men who have served it right have received their reward. Need we mention names?

"And let's have a few more facts.

"Too many men in this organization are not minding their own business. Too many are 'chiseling' on others. Fortunately they are in a minority, but still there are too many of them.

"Stop butting in on the other fellow. Stop trying to gum up his work. So long as that sort of thing goes on the affairs of the organization are not going to meet with the success they deserve.

"And, if the affairs of the circuit are not as successful as they ought to be, the stockholders, through the executives who represent them, are going to take action.

"Let's hope that action isn't necessary. There are enough unfortunates selling apples. Their ranks don't need to be increased.

"And that isn't all that has to be said. Just a bit of news for those who have been writing anonymous letters. Those letters are being returned to Los Angeles to be read and acted upon here.

"In the East they have served only one purpose—to put their authors on the spot. They have done no injury to their intended victims.

"Theatres, Studio Viewed as Fox Unit"

"One other matter might as well be mentioned. We are affiliated with Fox Film Corporation. In the eyes of those who head our companies we are virtually one unit. Our loyalty does not stop within the limits of Fox West Coast Theatres. It includes a loyalty to our affiliates—all of them.

"It's our business to run theatres. It's the business of Fox Film to produce pictures. Maybe we don't like all the pictures they give us. But it may also be true that they don't like the way we run our theatres.

"Regardless of our likes and dislikes, or their likes and dislikes, it's time that we and they began to tackle our respective jobs with our eyes on our own ploughs and not the other fellow's.

"Criticism and correction of the way we run our theatres or the manner in which they produce their pictures is not for us or for them: that, if it is necessary, will come from those in authority above all of us.

"Every time we whimper about pictures we stand to be accused, rightly or wrongly, of digging up alibis. Every time any one in the Film Corporation whimpers about our handling of their pictures they stand to be similarly accused.

"Stockholders Expect Cooperation"

"But accusation and recriminations aren't going to get us or them anything except censure for not tending to our respective jobs.

"The point is that those in authority of both companies expect us to work together and have a right to expect it. It's time a lot of us in the theatre end of the affiliation awoke to that fact.

"We have only one path before us and it is the proper path. It is our business to show that with good pictures and bad we understand our jobs well enough to get the utmost out of both kinds. No one can ask us to do more than that.

"Our organization is in good health. It faces no dangers, either financial or from the standpoint of the loyalty of its personnel.

"The black sheep among us are few—very few. They could be individually tracked down and eliminated, but that would be unfair to them. Most of them are basically decent and can be changed into assets to the company. But that change can best be worked by themselves, not by the executives of the organization.

"That is why this frank method of dealing with them has been adopted—to give them a chance to reform themselves. No man can redeem another. Each must redeem himself. And there is no man who is not worthy of being given that opportunity.

"Take it!"

Circuit Beats Prospective Exhibitor To Draw and He Retires Amicably

A well known Chicago film man recently made a decision to enter the exhibition field, and selected from his store of experience the town of Dixon, Ill., as the best suited to the launching of his new enterprise. Dixon is a busy town of about 12,000 population, 150 miles west of Chicago, and has but one threatre—locally owned.

The film man's plans progressed, quietly but effectively. It appeared that a public announcement of an opening must be only a matter of days away. Then, suddenly, all activities came to a halt, the film man lost all interest in his new theatre plans in Dixon and withdraw from the field without any argument.

It is now known that a large, national circuit has been negotiating for the existing Dixon theatre for some time past, and the deal will be closed in the near future. The film man, learning of this, realized that his entry into the town would only serve to hasten sale of the existing theatre by its local owners, whereupon he would be left to battle a circuit house with all its resources, film buying advantages, etc. Dixon ceased to appeal to him as a business opportunity.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

ONE of the three largest picture palaces on New York's Broadway is losing between $10,000 and $18,000 weekly. . . . So this week the management cut salaries of its approximately 50 ushers from $20 to $13 per. . . . Saving only $350 every seven days, and still leaving a weekly red figure ranging from $9,650 to $17,650. . . . Next week, probably, the "Lily" paper cups will be ordered out of the porters' room. . . .

More Truth Than Poetry

An author wrote a novel which created quite a hum.
A film producer bought it for a most amazing sum.
Production plans were snappy, and the cast was highly paid,
So I interviewed the author when the photoplay was made.

He howled because they'd changed
it—just a little here and there.
His poor but honest hero had been made a millionaire.
His heroine was different; now, she ran a cabaret,
For the town which had been Yonkers had been switched to Mandalay.
His sad, unhappy ending had assumed a rosy hue,
And it seems that when they finished they had changed the ending, too.

He raved, and also ranted, and he wept upon my neck,
And he tore his hair in anguish. (But he didn't tear the check.)

14 Features on Metro's Current Studio Schedule

With 14 productions preparing, in production or editing, M-G-M's Culver City studio is now at its greatest peak for 1931.

Five are currently working, and four more will start soon. Five have just been completed and are now being cut and edited.

Greta Garbo starts immediately under direction of Robert Z. Leonard on the much-discussed version of David Graham Phillip's "Susan Lenox, Her Fall and Rise." She will be supported by Clark Gable.

Also starting at once is George Hill, director, on "Sea Eagles," an original story of naval aviation by Lt. Com. Frank Wead, much of which is to be filmed aboard the naval aircraft carrier, U. S. S. "Saratoga." Featured will be Wallace Beery, Marjorie Rambeau and Clark Gable.

Race Track Yarn Scheduled

Seeking a race track picture to add to its program, M-G-M bought the Satevepost story, "Horseflesh," by Frederick Hazlett Brenan. Adaptation has been made by Wanda Tuchock, Willard Mack and Jack Cunningham. Director Charles Brabin has not yet completed his cast, but Ernest Torrence will have a part.

Helen Hayes has rushed from New York to make her talking picture debut in "Lullaby," by Edward Knoblock. This will be directed by Edgar Selwyn. Support includes Neil Hamilton, Lewis Stone and Ruth Selwyn. It has been adapted from the play by Charles MacArthur.

The five stories already in work, which the four above mentioned will join next week follow:

Ramon Novarro is completing "Son of India," adapted by Ernest Vadja. Jacques Feyder is directing. The support lists Madge Evans, Conrad Nagel, Marjorie Rambeau, Nigel de Brulier, C. Aubrey Smith, John Miljan and Mitchell Lewis.

Marie Dressler is appearing as a woman candidate for Mayor in "Politics," Charles Reisner directing, with Polly Moran as her campaign manager. "Politics" is by Robert Hopkins, with Wells Root, Zelda Sears and Malcolm Stuart Boylan collaborating on continuity and dialogue.

Robert Montgomery is continuing with "Man In Possession," directed by Sam Wood. Adapted by Sarah Y. Mason and P. G. Wodehouse. Cast includes Charlotte Greenwood, Irene Purcell, C. Aubrey Smith, Beryl Mercer, Reginald Owen, Maude Eburne, Forrester Harvey and York Sherwood.

Nearly half-way completed is "The Great Lover," which Harry Beaumont is directing with Adolphe Menjou in the lead. M-G-M purchased the rights from Cohan and Harris.

Satire and "kidding" at the expense of gangster stories will be laid on thick in Buster Keaton's next, "Sidewalks of New York." The production is being directed by Zion Myers and Jules White, with Anita Page playing the feminine role.

Another group of five productions have been completed within the past ten days and are now undergoing cutting and titling.

Among these is "Five and Ten," next Marion Davies production, by Fannie Hurst. The director is Robert Z. Leonard.

Tod Browning, Marcel De Sano, Paul Fejos, Harry Pollard, George Fitzmaurice, Arthur Robison, and W. S. Van Dyke, directors on the M-G-M payroll, are at work on new stories which will go into production in the near future.

John Gilbert will start within a month or so on a new production, not yet titled. A new story is being prepared for Lawrence Tibbett as soon as he completes his current concert tour.

Big 4 Lining Up 1931-32 Product

Big 4 is at work on its program for 1931-1932.

The independent producer is finding it expedient to "mark time" while the major companies' programs are assembled, according to John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, who states that in this way product may be made consistent with the larger companies—this similarity of plan often resulting in additional playing time from the circuits. With this thought in mind Big 4 proposes to draft stories for its series of 12 Westerns and eight action melodramas.

John R. Freuler

For the series of Westerns the plots will be "alternating." This will lift from a highly specialized field the danger of too great similarity. An advisory committee composed of affiliated exchangemen is being formed to pass upon stories and stars to insure fulfillment of exhibitor requirements.

Exchanges affiliated with Big 4 in the distribution of product follow:

Standard, Albany; Arthur C. Bromberg, Atlanta; World Art, Boston; Standard, Buffalo; Sheffield, Butte; Bromberg, Charlotte; Security, Chicago; Fischer, Cincinnati; Fischer, Cleveland; Allied, Dallas; Sheffield, Denver; Excellent, Detroit; Security, Indianapolis; Midwest, Kansas City; Home State, Little Rock; Co-operative, Los Angeles; Big 4, Milwaukee; Celebrated, Minneapolis; World Art, New Haven; Bromberg, New Orleans; Capital, New York; Allied, Oklahoma City; Capitol, Omaha; Gold Medal, Philadelphia; Alexander, Pittsburgh; Sheffield, Portland; Sheffield, Salt Lake City; Co-operative, San Francisco; Sheffield, Seattle; Progressive, St. Louis; Bromberg, Tampa; Gold Medal, Washington; Excellent, Toronto, and Filmophone Renters, London.

Wally Wales, who is appearing in six Westerns for Big 4, is leaving for Sonora, Cal., to appear in "Flying Lariats," final release of the series. David Kirkland will direct. Company will return to Universal for interiors when outdoor shooting has been completed.

The Big 4 Western tentatively titled "Ridin' Kid" has been changed to "Flying Lariats," and completes the series of 12 Westerns on Big 4's current initial release schedule.

Thirty-six towns in Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina and Louisiana have been closed by the Arthur Bromberg Attractions on Big 4 Westerns, melodramas and two-reel comedies.

Fox 1930-31 Schedule Done; Five New Pictures In Work

In work are "Bad Girl," "The Plutocrat," "Merely Mary Ann," "Skyline" and "Wicked."

Warner-1st Nat'l Production Crew On Big Schedule

All production records for Warners and First National were broken this week, according to J. L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, when ten feature pictures were in production at the same time.

Nine additional features will be in production by the first week of June. A check of the Hollywood studios shows that Warner pictures now in production include:

"Night Nurse," with Barbara Stanwyck, Ben Lyon and Joan Blondell, directed by William Wellman.

"Side Show," Winnie Lightner, Charles Butterworth, Evalyn Knapp and Donald Cook, directed by Roy del Ruth.

"Alexander Hamilton," starring George Arliss; east includes Doris Kenyon, Dudley Digges, Alan Mowbray, June Collyer.

"The Other Man," William Powell's first starring picture for Warners based on Roland Pertwee's original, directed by Alfred E. Green with Marian Marsh, Doris Kenyon and Louis Calhearn in support.

"Bought," starring Constance Bennett, adapted from Harriet Henry's "Jackdaws Strut," with Ben Lyon, Richard Bennett and Dorothy Peterson in support and Archie Mayo directing.

First National pictures now in production include:

"Spent Bullets," starring Richard Barthelmess, with Helen Chandler, John Mack Brown, David Manners, Walter Byron and Elliot Nugent in the cast. This is from John Monk Saunder's "Single Lady." Directed by Wilhelm Dieterle.

"Five Star Final," starring Edward G. Robinson, with Marian Marsh, H. B. Warner, Anthony Bushell and Ona Munson, directed by Mervyn LeRoy.

"The Honor of the Family," Balzac's play, starring Bebe Daniels, with Warren William, and Alan Mowbray in the supporting cast. Lloyd Bacon directing.

"Penrod and Sam" from Booth Tarkington's kids' story, with Leon Janney and Junior Coghlan, directed by William Beaudine.

"I Like Your Nerve," an original by Roland Pertwee, with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Loretta Young, directed by William MeGann.

The nine pictures to start within the next few weeks are:

For Warners: "The Star Witness," with a cast, headed by Charles Chic Sale, Jack Holt, Sally Blane, Eddie Nugent, Frances Starr and Grant Mitchell, directed by William Wellman; "Mister Hercules," with Frank Fay and Marian Marsh, directed by Michael Curtiz; "The Mouthpiece," featuring Warren William; "Safe In Hell," directed by Roy del Ruth; "Larceny Lane," co-featuring James Cagney and Joan Blondell.

For First National: "The Blue Moon Murder Mystery," Walter Huston in S. S. Van Dine's original; "The World Changes," starring Edward G. Robinson and directed by Wilhelm Dieterle; "Local Boy Makes Good" with Joe E. Brown, Lloyd Bacon directing; "Our Social Whirl," starring Marilyn Miller, and directed by Mervyn LeRoy.

Darryl Zanuck is the associate executive handling details of Warner production, with Hal Wallis and C. Graham Baker, in similar capacities for First National.

Hughes Putting Three In Work Within Next 30 Days

Within the next 30 days, Howard Hughes will have in production three films, "Ground Hogs," "Age for Love," with Billie Dove and "Scarface," gangster picture.

FILMING A "GREAT SOUL"

It would be safer not to trust too much the movie camera men when they say they found Gandhi, the Mahatma, more capricious and temperamental than Hollywood stars. Not that we doubt Gandhi was "difficult." The business must have irked and annoyed him a good deal.

The really interesting thing is not his manner. It is his submission to even a short session before the camera. That is another clear-cut triumph for the brute power of the movies. The news accounts say he broke a twenty-five year resolution never to be formally photographed, and put away his dislike for things mechanical to go through with the business. To many it will seem a curious identification of the Eastern ascetic with these typical Western ways of life which previously he has rejected. Western high-pressure publicity, Western entertainment for the masses, Western exploitation of a personality—these are scarcely things one would have thought of in connection with the Hindu philosopher and advocate of spinning by hand.

Whether he was motivated by some desire to conciliate the large though vague popular following attracted to him in the West; or by some political motive not yet disclosed to us; or, just possibly, by some secret vanity, we shall not guess. But that Gandhi will now talk from the screen along with* Mussolini, †King Carol and exiled‡ Alfonso XIII is in itself sufficient evidence that he did have some strange, strong, inner motive. Whatever his motive, the movies have had their way with another "world leader" who is also an authentic "great soul." For them, anyway, it must have been worth all the trouble.

Chicago Theatres Brand Operators' Aid as Sarcastic

The offer of Chicago projectionists to forego one week's salary during the month of June is not regarded by Chicago exhibitors as a solution for summer operating problems.

The projectionists met last week and voluntarily agreed to contribute one week's pay to their employers "to help tide them over a temporary period of depression." The exhibitors had previously asked for some adjustment of the wage scale for the three mid-summer months, which would permit the usual number of theatres to remain open here during the hot period. Exhibitor leaders now state that the operators' union action will in no way serve to offset summer closings, and characterized the action as a gesture of sarcastic magnanimity.

"The union's announcement that it believes the exhibitors are in need of assistance to tide them over a period of depression is decidedly grim humor," said one exhibitor. "Their magnanimous offer to contribute a week's wages to their employers has all the charity and significance of tossing a bone to a dog. It will solve no exhibitor's problem. If they refuse a week's wages in June, as they say they will, it will not permit a single theatre to remain open this summer that would have been obliged to close otherwise."

Numerous exhibitors questioned stated that they would accept the union's week-without-pay offer, but all denied the action would forestall summer closings now deemed necessary.

PEE WEE GOLF EMERGES FROM ITS WINTER SHELL

Well, It's a "Super"!

Employees gathered in whispering knots and looked askance at the door of Director Gregory La Cava's office at Radio's studio.

"Hypochondriac!" said one in a stage whisper.

Inside "Greg" sat tasting and frowning—first a spoonful of one brand of tonic, then a few drops of another, a third, a fourth, and so on, nodding and shaking his head by turns.

An assistant director and a "prop" boy hovered solicitously near. Kneeling on the floor was a stranger, who resembled one of the Smith brothers, displaying an array of nostrums, balsams, panaceas for all ills—an array of patent medicines which in the Mauve Decade was found on every shelf and in every stomach!

Excitement grew keener as "Greg" pointed to a particular brand and said, "I'll take a case of this!"

He had made a momentous decision!

He had decided the kind of tonic that Edward Everett Horton should drink in his current opus.

Florida 10% Tax Bill Is Fourth Adverse Measure

A bill presented to the Florida legislature would levy a 10% tax on all theatre tickets, as well as soft drinks, candy, playing cards and the like.

This is the fourth bill affecting theatres presented to the legislature. Two of them were tax measures and the third a Sunday bill, which was killed in committee.

Alleged Fugitive Caught

Norman King, 21 years old, was arrested at New Orleans and held for Detroit authorities, where he is said to be wanted for larceny of $3,400 from the Publix theatre, where he was cashier. According to the arresting officers, King admitted taking $200, but said that the rest had been stolen by others not in the employ of the house.

"Minnie" Golf Courses Now Being Spruced Up for Big Drive to Recoup Last Year's Losses

Pee-Wee, the golf cub, who has been hibernating all Winter, is coming out of his hole. His owners and keepers in practically every town in the country have got out the brushes and combs, the vacuum cleaners and the paint brushes and are polishing and furbushing the baby in the hope that he will show some signs of activity this season and make up some of the losses he suffered last year. And, once again, theatre owners make ready to battle vigorously this form of opposition which last season made an appreciable dent in box-office receipts.

Mayor John C. Porter, of Los Angeles, just before he left for Paris, did his best to revive the more or less moribund infant. The official pulmotor, issued from the mayor's office at the request of owners of 2,400 miniature golf courses in the Los Angeles territory, reads:

"To the citizens of Los Angeles, Greetings:

"Miniature golf has become a popular national sport. As a wholesome outdoor recreation it is a contributory factor in the upbuilding of the health of our people.

"The opening of the miniature golf season in Los Angeles, and the maintenance of these courses throughout the city, will provide employment for hundreds, a consideration of merit at this time.

"Therefore, as mayor of the city of Los Angeles, I hereby proclaim the week commencing May 15, 1931, as 'Miniature Golf Week' and I trust that the public will lend its support to this health-giving activity.

JOHN C. PORTER, Mayor."

Armed with this spur to public interest, the golf course owners have become very busy. New fairways are being laid, new hazards installed, new inducements and ballyhoos being framed.

For instance, the Mary Pickford golf course, on Wilshire Boulevard, is announcing a grand prize of a Chevrolet car. Still another course on Vermont Street is to give away an Austin. The prices at the lunch counters on the courses are being cut a bit and several are installing soda fountains.

Some of the courses will not operate with golf this year. The Ruth Roland course was turned into a fishing camp last year and will continue that way. Several others became archery ranges and will remain so. Also a number of new driving ranges are being built, it being felt that there is more fun and exercise in walloping a golf ball on the nose with a driver or a brassie than there is in simply rolling it around on green carpet with a putter.

So all the golf course owners are quite optimistic over the prospect of getting back some of the money they lost last year—and it was plenty. However, there is, as usual, a fly in the ointment. This fly is the Chamber of Commerce of North Hollywood. The proposition to indorse the mayor's proclamation was voted down.

Ad Dept. Shifts In Publix B & K

An attempt on the part of Publix Balaban & Katz executives in Chicago to "strengthen and rebuild" an advertising staff that once ranked as the best in the country, is evidenced in a general weeding out of newcomers, and several policy changes including higher salaries, reduction of interference with and duplicated supervision of copy writers, and abolition of standardized space regulations as now practiced by B. & K.

The official statements with regard to several recent resignations mention summer economy as the reason, but it is understood it is the form in which home office Publix executives are recording their displeasure at the breakdown of the old "ace" department. John Balaban is said to be most concerned over the breakup, since he built it to its original high place in ad circles.

Hays Not Banning Gangster Stories

In a cablegram to Edgar Wallace, British playwright, Will H. Hays denied reports that the association was banning "On the Spot," and makes clear that he is not attempting to ban gangster films.

He pointed out that he had said at a recent directors' meeting that care should be taken in handling that type of film, and he noted his belief that too many such films "would tend to overemphasize the subject matter. Themes of this character are on the wane in literature and on the stage and screen," he said.

Paramount Signs Wm. DeMille

Brock's Nine

Louis Brock is not a baseball manager—even though he boasts about his team of nine players!

Brock produces short subjects in Hollywood for Radio and he believes two-reelers are as important as features. Therefore, he signs stars not only of feature magnitude but world famous.

Here's the famous nine which Brock promises in a series of two-reelers on the 1931-32 program:

George Von Elm, golf wizard; Jimmy Savo, comic-pantomist; Clark and McCullough; Charles "Chic" Sale; W. C. Fields, hit comedian; Rosco Ates; Ford Sterling; Ned Sparks, and Lucien Littlefield.

Independents To Do 192 Features

A survey by Motion Picture Daily reveals that 22 independent producer-distributor companies will offer a total of 192 features and 247 short subjects and eight serials during 1931-32.

Many are new companies, including Allied, Art Class, Associated Cinemas, Big 4, Capital Film Exchange, Central Film, Chadwick, Chesterfield, Continental, Falcon, First Division, Headline, Hoffman, Bachmann, Ideal, Judea, Liberty, Mascot, Meteor, Monogram, Pioneer, Regal, G. C. Reid, Simple Simon, Talking Picture Epics, Ufa, Visugraphic, J. D. Williams and World International.

M-G-M Lists Ten More 1930-31 Films

Ten features are named on M-G-M's revised feature release schedule for the remainder of 1930-31. All will be released between the end of this month and August, when the 1931-32 season starts. The new pictures are:

May 30—"This Modern Age," starring Joan Crawford; June—"Five and Ten," starring Marion Davies; "Just a Gigolo," William Haines; Norma Shearer's "A Free Soul," "The Great Lover," with Adolphe Menjou, Irene Dunne; and "Politics," Dressler-Moran vehicle; July—"Horseflesh," racing drama; "Buster Keaton's "Sidewalks of New York," and "Son of India," with Madge Evans and Conrad Nagel. Fox to Quit Silent Version Production

Several films now in production will be the last of which Fox will make silent versions. The announcement of this policy indicates that not only is the domestic silent field now too small, but that the wiring of foreign houses has advanced to a point making exportation of silent versions no longer worth while.

Belief in Hollywood is that this step on the part of Fox will be followed shortly by other producers.

Asks Ad Reels Be Marked on Bill

E. W. Castle, head of Castle Films, has applied to the Federal Trade Commission to halt the practice of showing ad films on the theatre program without designating them as such.

He mentions Paramount and Warners specifically in his complaint, calling ad films a "deception on the public." He states he understands Paramount and Warners have sold approximately $4,000,000 worth of the reels, with advertisers charged from $10,000 to $15,000 production costs, and $4,000 for 100 prints used nationally.

Ad Reel Competition Seen as Paramount Enters Open Field

Keen competition in the sponsored reel field is expected to result from Paramount's plan of going into the open market for playdates, with 52 short ad subjects.

Warners are making a similar number, Kinograms plans a newsreel service and independents, including Visugraphic Pictures and General Electric are producing theatrical industrial reels.

Home Films and Television, Big Problems: Dreher

The improvement of television and development of 16 mm. home and semi-commercial picture applications are the outstanding technical innovations affecting the industry at present, according to Carl Dreher, Radio sound director, upon his return to Hollywood this week from New York.

Dreher, who saw extensive laboratory previews of new television apparatus, says it is nearing the point where it will be applicable for home installation. It will be several years, he predicts, before the new art will affect the theatre.

When it does become commercially suitable for theatrical presentation, he says, it may be confined largely to "intimate" type theatres seating limited audiences.

The 16 mm. film, he finds, is making rapid strides. Already several corporations are contemplating the production of dramatic and comic films for the home on a rental basis which will be within reach of the public.

Dreher discovered that there were no radical improvements being made in sound recording. The trend, he says, is in the direction of engineering and artistic refining with the personal element—the judgment of individual recorders—still the most important item in the reproduction of sound.

DEVELOPMENT BY VICTOR SPEEDS HOME TELEVISION

A Close Guess

A backwoods exhibitor down New Orleans way found a mirror which a patron had lost. "Well, if it ain't my old dad," he said as he looked in the mirror, "I never knowed he had a picture took." He took the mirror home and stole into the attic to hide it. His actions didn't escape his suspicious wife. That night while he slept, she slipped up to the attic and found the mirror. "Hum-um," she said, looking into the mirror, "So that's the old hag he's been chasing."

Trans Lux, News Projection Agree

An agreement has been concluded between the Trans Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation and News Projection Corporation, whereby an operating company for the movie ticker business of both companies will be established, to be called the Trans Lux Movie Ticker Company. The plan was approved at a stockholders' meeting this week.

Trans Lux will open one more theatre very shortly, at Playland, Rye, N. Y., the rental on it and the two at 49th Street and Broadway being an agreed percentage of the box office gross.

In a letter to stockholders, P. Furber, chairman of the board, noted that because of the small space used for the houses, without coming under the head of theatres, the plan is to build a circuit of these houses over the country and later in foreign countries.

The stockholders' approval ends litigation of the past five years between the two companies. Interest of the two will be owned in substantially the proportions of their actual operating rental contracts as of April 1, 1931. The Picture Screen Company's interest will be trusteed and held in the treasury of that company as the stock interest in Trans Lux Movies Corporation is held.

Trem Carr, production head, has decided on the unit system of production, each unit a complete production department in itself, and each to produce eight films during the season.

Home Machine to Be Marketed at Popular Prices Through Radio Merchandising System

RCA's entrance into the home television field within a year, as exclusively reported in Motion Picture Herald on May 9, will be made through a new home televisor which has been developed at the RCA Victor plant at Camden, N. J.

RCA Victor radio dealers will handle sales, backed by a heavy merchandising ballyhoo by the parent company.

As stated in the Herald's initial announcement, television will not hurt films, representing less than one-tenth as much an invasion of the motion picture field as the home motion picture is today.

It will appear in a yellow-green and tones of black, instead of the unpleasant black and pink which through earlier experimental work has been associated with television.

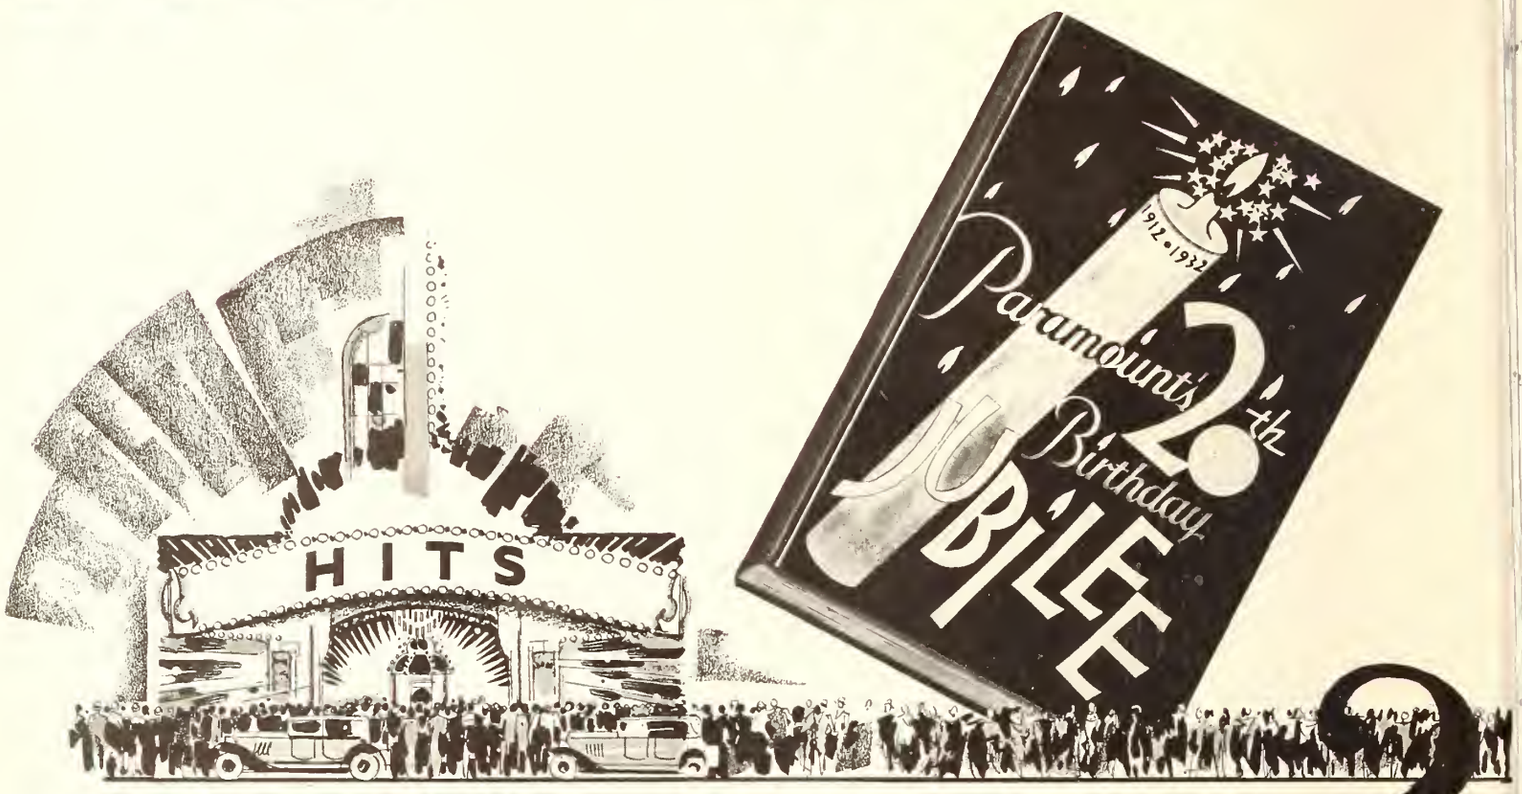
The new reproducer, stated David Sarnoff, who now is in Hollywood with other RKO and executives, will be the forerunner of television as it will appear a few years later in its final form of direct broadcasting from theatres, studios, etc.

RCA Victor and NBC radio engineers now are testing the effect steel buildings have on wave lengths suitable for television broadcasting. The experiments are being conducted in New York and will continue in other large cities.

At a dinner this week at the Hollywood Ambassador Hotel, Sarnoff told RKO studio that big time vaudeville will come back into RKO theatres in the fall. He denied that RKO manpower would be disturbed, executive or otherwise, stating that people now working for the company would be given "every opportunity" to advance in any department where they fit. He said that he wanted workers to feel that their jobs are not temporary.

Sarnoff refused to "dignify" with a denial the report that S. L. Rothafel, who accompanied him to the Coast, would succeed William LeBaron as studio chief at Radio. Hiram Brown, president of RKO likewise followed with emphatic denial the story of LeBaron's resignation.

"Roxy" will permit use of his name on the New York Roxy theatre until 1932, when he will acquire rights for its use on one of the buildings in the proposed New York "Radio City" Rockfeller theatre venture.



Westerns for RKO Pathe Lot

"Sets Not Cowpaths," States Goldwyn, Barring the Public

In the future Samuel Goldwyn will have all his United Artists pictures made on "closed sets," with high canvas partitions completely surrounding them, in an effort to keep out everyone not directly concerned with the film's production. No exceptions are contemplated in the strict enforcement of the rule.

"This business of making common property of every new idea in picture making is a bad one," said Goldwyn. "As soon as a new production value is developed, it immediately is poorly duplicated in a dozen inferior pictures, frequently released before the carefully worked out plan can be fully realized.

"We are facing an absolute need for economy in production. That means making pictures without a minute's needless delay. I want to stop this business of making a cowpath out of our sets. The place to see pictures is in the theatre, not on the set."

The ruling goes into effect immediately, with the start of production of "The Unholy Garden."

Sign Company Suing RKO, Charging Contract Breach

Quehl Sign Co., Cincinnati, has filed suit for $74,828 against RKO for alleged breach of contract for erection of signs and marquee displays on the Albee, Palace, Lyric, Capitol and Strand at Cincinnati.

The company claims it entered into contract for the job in February, but that since then, RKO turned the work over to United Sign Co., New York, alleged subsidiary of RKO.

Portland, Oregon, Censor Board Increased to Five

Ballyhoo Helps "Name" Shows in Small Key Spots

Big-name acts, prominently identified with night club and stage life in three or four of the country's big towns sometimes encounter difficulties when they reach theatres in the smaller cities.

Heavy ballyhooing and an elaborate exploitation campaign usually turn what might be a flat week into one of successful box-office proportions, as evidenced by the campaign put over for Duke Ellington's "Cotton Club" unit at the World, Omaha. A specific example of what advertising and publicity will do to make an attraction, is contained in the campaign.

Ellington was hardly known in Omaha, his only following being phonograph record fans and radio listeners who heard his broadcasts from the New York Cotton Club. But before Manager William Miskell got through with a campaign, every one in Omaha knew about Ellington and his band.

An example of local application was the tie-up made with the Omaha Bee-News for a benefit ball at which the Ellington orchestra played. The proceeds from this were donated to the Free Milk and Ice Fund, sponsored by the Bee-News, which distributes milk and ice to the needy.

Tie-up Nets Front Pages

In order not to take the edge off the engagement at the theatre, the ball was held after the band closed its last performance on Thursday night. This publicity tie-up with the Bee-News netted the theatre and band 1,610 lines of publicity, not to mention eight column heads, and the fact that the majority of the publicity appeared on page 1, or on page 1 of the second section.

An amusing sidelight of the campaign was a trick bet between Miskell and Ellington which brought lineage and pictures in the press. Miskell bet Ellington that he would be unable to carry his weekly salary to the bank. Ellington took him up. When pay day came he was handed the entire pay for the orchestra in pennies. Ellington was unable to lift the sack and lost his bet.

As a forfeit he had to play the piano on a flat-bottomed truck at the city's busiest intersection. The hat was passed and all donations were contributed to the paper's milk fund. The papers went for it big.

In addition to the newspaper campaign, the merchandising of Ellington included nine music store window tie-ups, and a tremendous banner 72x33 feet that covered the entire theatre front.

Special Trailer Used

As a trailer for this special attraction, Miskell conceived the idea of using a talking short of Ellington entitled "Black and Tan" a week in advance. By running two machines in the booth at the same time, they superimposed a local trailer on the musical short.

Publix Loses on Double Bill

Double feature experiment which Skouras-Publix tried at Indianapolis at the Circle has failed and the old single policy returns on Friday. The Circle has been a "white elephant." Georges Metaxa, young Rumanian actor at the Paramount Eastern studio, has had his name changed to just Metaxa.

Industry Itself Is Banning Gang Film, Avers Civic Leader

Declaring that the industry itself is taking action to check the production of gangster pictures, Mrs. George C. Harrison, member of the Providence, R. I., Board of Public Safety, has announced her opposition to the suggestion of George T. Marsh, another member, that the board and local censor ban gangster films in this city.

She cited announcements of two producers that they would release no more pictures based on gangster activities, and that of another who, she said, assured her only an exceptionally good story would cause them to violate a similar policy. Marsh's specific objection was to "The Front Page."

Providence exhibitors say they wish only to cooperate with the board and Capt. George W. Cowan, police censor, yet declare that the public likes gangster films and that therefore they are money-makers. Among exhibitors who have voiced this point of view is Harry Storin of the RKO Albee, himself active in civic affairs.

Gangster films have also been defended by the Providence Journal, which closed an editorial in reply to Marsh by saying that "if more films had the rich, vital quality of 'The Front Page' it would be a far happier duty to report on them."

Corrigan to Direct "Daughter"

Lloyd Corrigan, Paramount director-writer, has received the double assignment of directing and adapting for Sax Rohmer's "Daughter of the Dragon." The production will bring Anna May Wong to the American screen once more after several years. She has been on the stage and screen in Europe for some time and recently returned to the United States to star in Edgar Wallace's "On the Spot."

A. H. Rowe Succeeds Mullen

Ben Mullen has resigned as manager of the Warner in downtown Pittsburgh, and is succeeded by A. H. Rowe, formerly of Publix. Ben Muller had been at the Warner for 10 years, having worked for Harry Davis when the house was known as the Million-Dollar Grand, before it was acquired by Warners.

Theatres in Buffalo are backing the move of Mayor Charles E. Roesch's unemployment relief committee to aid in keeping up the morale of those out of work with motion picture entertainment. The Lafayette of Charles Haymann, managed by George Mackenna, is the first downtown house to act upon the suggestion. It is offering 200 free tickets weekly for ten weeks.

Fox Financial Statement Is Due May 25

The long-awaited annual financial statement of Fox Film Corp., which is expected to show earnings of slightly more than $4 a share on common stock, is scheduled to appear on Monday, after several postponements caused by differences between Harley L. Clarke, president, and Price, Waterhouse & Co., auditors for the bankers interested in the recent $70,000,000 refinancing. These differences center around the method of amortization to be used in preparing the annual statement.

Net income of $10,200,000 is expected to be reported, which will cover the annual dividend the firm has been paying on the 2,525,660 shares of combined class A and B outstanding stock. Net in 1929 was $9,469,050.

Contradicts Current Impression

Despite an impression prevalent in trade and in financial circles that Clarke and the bankers' auditors had finally agreed to two separate reports, one each based on an old and new amortization plan for product, the Daily Investment News editorially pointed out this week that "This suggestion (made by observers) had the jocular quality of reducing corporate accounting to absurdity. After all," stated this publication, "if figures could be turned about to show whatever results desired, there could be no reason for any income statements.

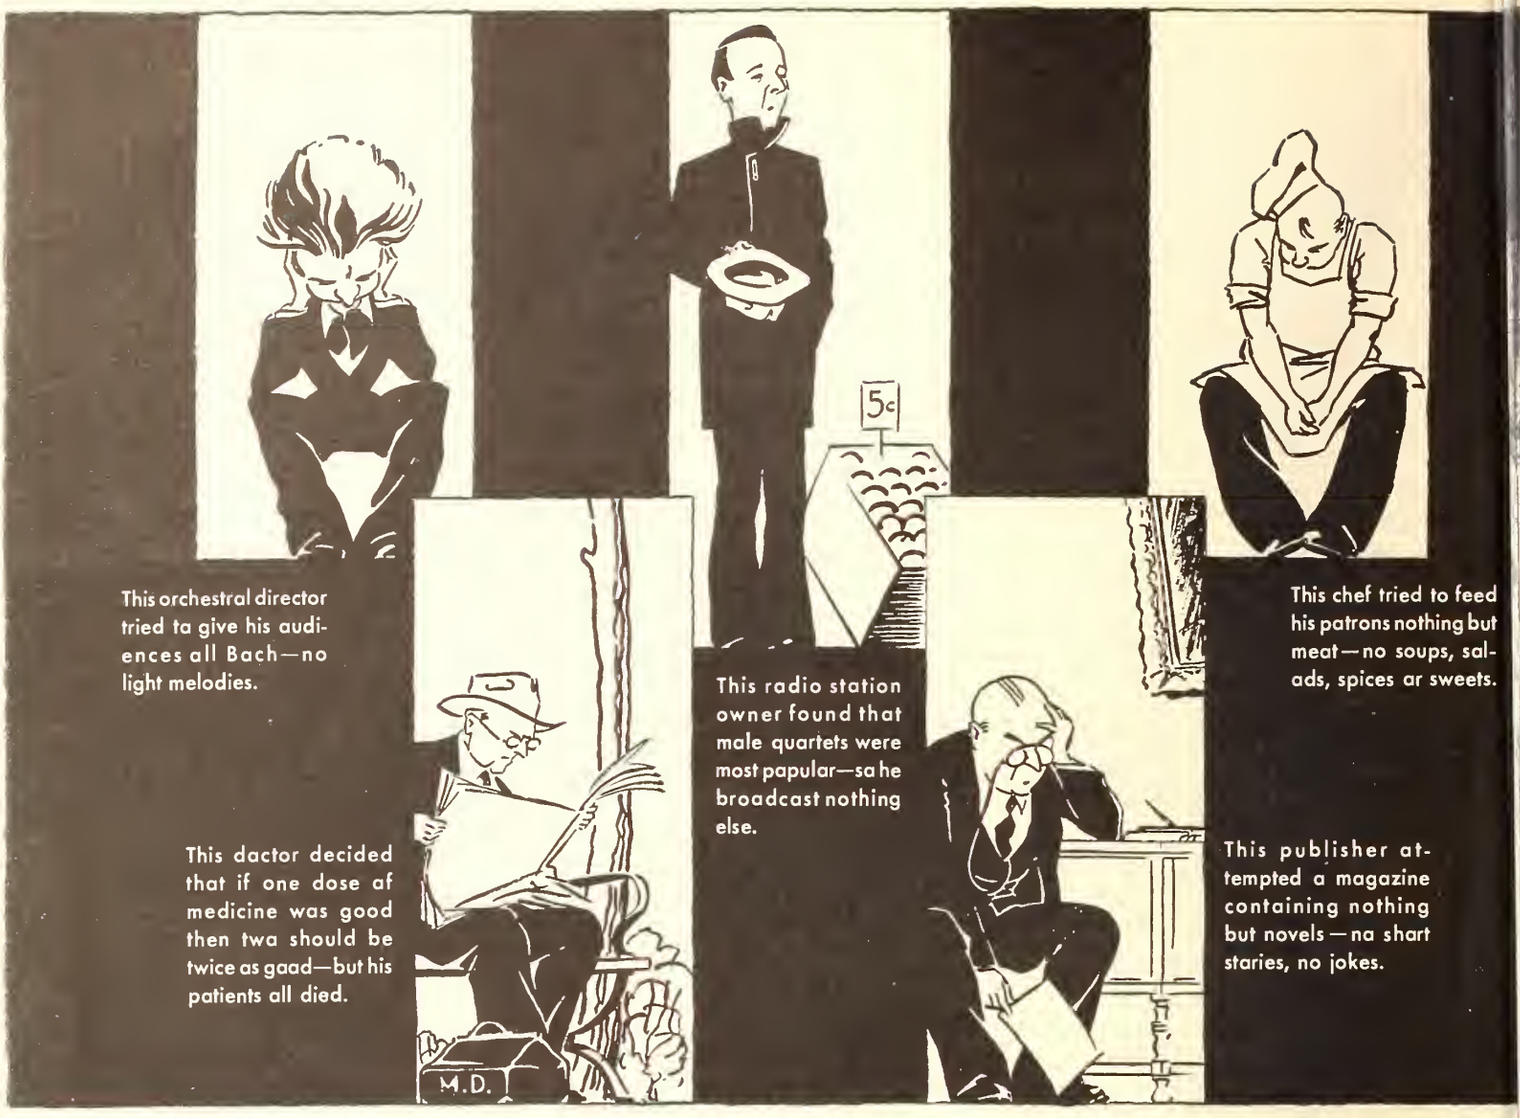
"What the report will do," it is stated, "is to analyze carefully the results which would obtain were the Price, Waterhouse system of amortization used, as against the amortization tables employed by Touche, Niven & Co., who have regularly audited the corporation's books."

Harley L. Clarke will analyze in detail the income account as certified by Touche, Niven. The annual report, as the result, will be one of the most elaborate ever issued.

Amortized on Earnings

The method of amortization regularly employed by Fox is charged on the basis of film earnings. Fifty per cent of the first six months' income from films is charged to amortization.

The Price, Waterhouse method sets forth a table which amortizes 93½ per cent of the book value of a film in 26 weeks. The contention of Clarke with respect to this is that a production's life is very much longer than 26 weeks and therefore the amortization table of the bankers' accountants was too high and would not reflect the true earnings of the corporation.



A further point made is that it would be unfair to ascribe such a drastic amortization table to the entire year 1930. This would make the amortization of film by this method retroactive.

It is possible that in computing 1931 results the corporation may adopt the Price, Waterhouse amortization tables. These have been adopted already by Paramount-Publix and Warner Brothers.

The annual meeting of Fox is scheduled for June 10, at which time new directors are expected to be named to the board, including A. H. Wiggin, chairman of the governing board of Chase National Bank.

Shortly after the annual meeting directors will convene to decide on the next dividend, due on July 15.

The meeting will be the middle of June.

"ENOUGH IS BETTER THAN TOO MUCH"

Though we've said it before, we must repeat again, "All features and no shorts make any program a dull program."

The pendulum swings from craze to craze and back again. But the wise man sits on the middle ground and knows that the keynote of success is proper balance.

Now the handwriting is on the wall, spelling the doom of the double feature. It is written in bold type in the trade press—written in shrinking figures in the bank books of countless theatre owners—and, most surely and clearly of all, it is written in the minds of the "fed-up" public, drugged with doubles and starved for a lack of laughs.

"—it is quality and not quantity that brings seekers of entertainment to the box-offiee . . . keep away from double features," says Jack Alicoate in THE FILM DAILY.

Under the banner line "Double Bill Fight To Boost Shorts" MOTION PICTURE HERALD announces "Publix Starts Building Up Shorts To Counter-balance Double Shows At Competitive Houses."

The FILM DAILY says of the short subject program—. . . . "it is far preferable to the suicide policy of double features."

Adolph Zukor is quoted in FILM DAILY as saying. "Double feature programs . . . . . work to no one's advantage."

And according to Felix Feist in FILM DAILY ". . . . . double features help to drive the juvenile trade from the theatres."

said gross sales of theatre equipment during the first quarter of 1931 exceeded those of the first quarter of the preceding year by $850,000 and added that, greater earnings are assured when normal buying power is restored.

International Projector Corp., a subsidiary, is about to market a number of important developments, Clarke said, among them an entirely new portable motion picture projector and sound reproducing equipment of new design. The United States Navy, Clarke said, has ordered a large quantity of these machines for delivery before July 1.

Development of a compact 16 mm. pocket camera and a correspondingly small projector were announced by Clarke, who said large orders are on hand for the new product. Another development, according to Clarke, was a new camera adjustable to standard and wide film.

DeForest Sound At $25 Weekly

A new selling policy for DeForest sound equipment is claimed by M. A. Schlesinger, president of General Talking Pictures, as revolutionary in the equipment field. Exhibitors, according to the plan, get sound apparatus for $25 weekly for the first three years, $10 weekly for the next three years and without charge for the remaining four years of the 10-year contract.

The plan being retroactive, exhibitors who have paid more than the $25 rate on equipment now installed, will receive a rebate. The exhibitor has option of cancellation after three years. The new selling plan followed adoption some time ago of delivery of equipment on a down payment of $37.50.

Schlesinger said: "We are selling sound, not equipment, and we will operate in the same manner as a public utility, assuring the exhibitor uninterrupted reproduction service."

Warner-F. N. Production Is Combined; Zanuck in Charge

Warner and First National Coast production has been consolidated under Darryl Zanuck, who will report to Jack L. Warner. Hal Wallis and Lucien Hubbard are Zanuck's assistants, Graham Baker is scenario head; William Koenig remains as studio manager, and Robert Lord, Henry Blank and Ray Griffith are production executives.

Under the new plan the studios will work on a 12-month basis, with four productions in work at once instead of the present six. This results in a personnel cut of from 15 to 20 per cent. The First National writing staff has been practically eliminated.

Cour is of wide acquaintance in the East and Middle West through his activities in production and in behalf of various newsreels. What Harold B. Franklin calls the second phase in the development of the Hughes-Franklin circuit, will be inaugurated with the chain's first convention, to be held in Dallas starting Monday. Franklin arrived in New York this week and the Dallas convention will be the final business of major importance during his trip. The second phase referred to is that of consolidation and detailed organization of the circuit.

The first convention of theatre and division managers is to be held in Dallas, he states, because that is division headquarters for the Texas-Oklahoma group comprising 65 houses. Harold Robb and Ed Rowley, former owners of the R. & R. circuit taken over by Hughes-Franklin, are heads of this division.

Columbia Offers 26 Features, 104 Shorts in '31-32

Plans have been completed for the three regional conventions of Columbia Pictures to be held the end of the month. The first will be at the Park Central Hotel, New York, May 27, 28, 29. The second will be at the Congress Hotel in Chicago for Middle Western and Southern sales people on May 31, June 1 and 2, and the third at the Roosevelt in Hollywood, June 6, 7, 8.

Joe Brandt, president; Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production; and Jack Cohn, treasurer, will attend all meetings, in company with the home office executives of the various departments.

New season product will be announced, consisting of 26 features, 104 shorts and two series of Westerns, one of them the group of eight Buck Jones Westerns. The company has acquired for distribution a new series of 13 animated cartoons, called "Scrappy," produced by Charles Mintz, creator of Krazy Kat for the screen. The central figure is a little boy. The Eddie Buzzell series of 13 "Bedtime Stories for Grownups" will be continued.

Columbia has secured a Fannie Hurst story, tentatively titled "Park Avenue," and rights to "The Rented Body," Rupert Hughes story.

Phil Dunas and Ben Benjamin have been appointed district managers for the mid-West and Middle States respectively. Dunas will have headquarters in Chicago and Benjamin in Kansas City. J. R. Beale has been made manager of the Portland exchange and Bob Garland manager of the Denver exchange.

Link Nathanson to Canada Chain

Evidence continues to arise supporting the belief that N. L. Nathanson, former Famous Players Canadian official, is organizing a theatre circuit across Canada. Thirty houses are said to be already in the chain, and formal announcement of their acquisition by a Nathanson company is expected to be made as soon as the Canadian government's investigation of the Dominion's film industry quiets down.

New support for the belief comes from various points in Canada. At Toronto those close to Nathanson have stated that British film interests will shortly have a chain outlet in the Dominion, while it is understood at Kitchener, Ont., that the "Nathanson syndicate" has purchased a site for a theatre there. Also a number of theatres have changed hands in the Maritime provinces, inquiry concerning which has brought the acknowledgment that the purchases were not made for Famous.

Illinois Owners Ready to Fight Operators' Bill

Illinois exhibitor leaders are marshaling opposition throughout the state to the McCluggage bill, which seeks to require an operator for every projection machine. It is frankly admitted that the bill, which will be put to a vote in the house within the next week or two, cannot be defeated without the united opposition of state exhibitors. The bill was recently reported out of the house judiciary committee favorably by a vote of 18 to 16.

The McCluggage bill is proposed as an amendment to existing fire prevention statutes and has the backing of Illinois locals of the M. P. Projectionists' Union, and affiliated labor organizations. It provides that: "Each machine used for the projection of motion pictures in any theatre or building where motion pictures are displayed to the public, at all times during the operation of the projecting machine shall be under the immediate supervision and physical control of a competent operator."

Jack Miller, head of the Exhibitors' Association, Chicago, states that inasmuch as even the smallest theatres in the state are now equipped with a minimum of two projection machines, the bill would require all Illinois exhibitors to employ a minimum of two operators.

The present agreement between the exhibitors in Chicago and the projectionists' Chicago local for the employment of two men in the sound booth terminates next January first.

Opposition to Illinois Censor Bill Expected to Defeat It

Industry leaders in Chicago assert that the Ryan state censorship bill will be reported out of committee favorably within the next ten days, but are of the opinion that opposition to its passage is sufficient to defeat the bill when it is put to a vote in the house.

Significant support was lost for the bill during the week when Mrs. A. O. Brooks, chairman of the Joint Committee on Motion Pictures of the Illinois Cook County Federation of Women's Clubs, announced that the committee would not send representatives to Springfield in support of the bill.

AFTER being elevated from assignments in smaller theatres to the post of master of ceremonies at the Oriental, Al Evans, bandmaster, made the mistake of taking his new position in life too seriously. It was reflected in his demeanor on stage and in his treatment of his musicians and other associates. It brought about an investigation of his professional conduct by the Chicago Musicians' Union, on the completion of which his suspension for three weeks was ordered. During the suspension period, Balaban & Katz decided Evans' temperament was not compatible with the organization's stage requirements. Evans was not reassigned. "An object lesson for swelled heads," is the official comment of union officials.

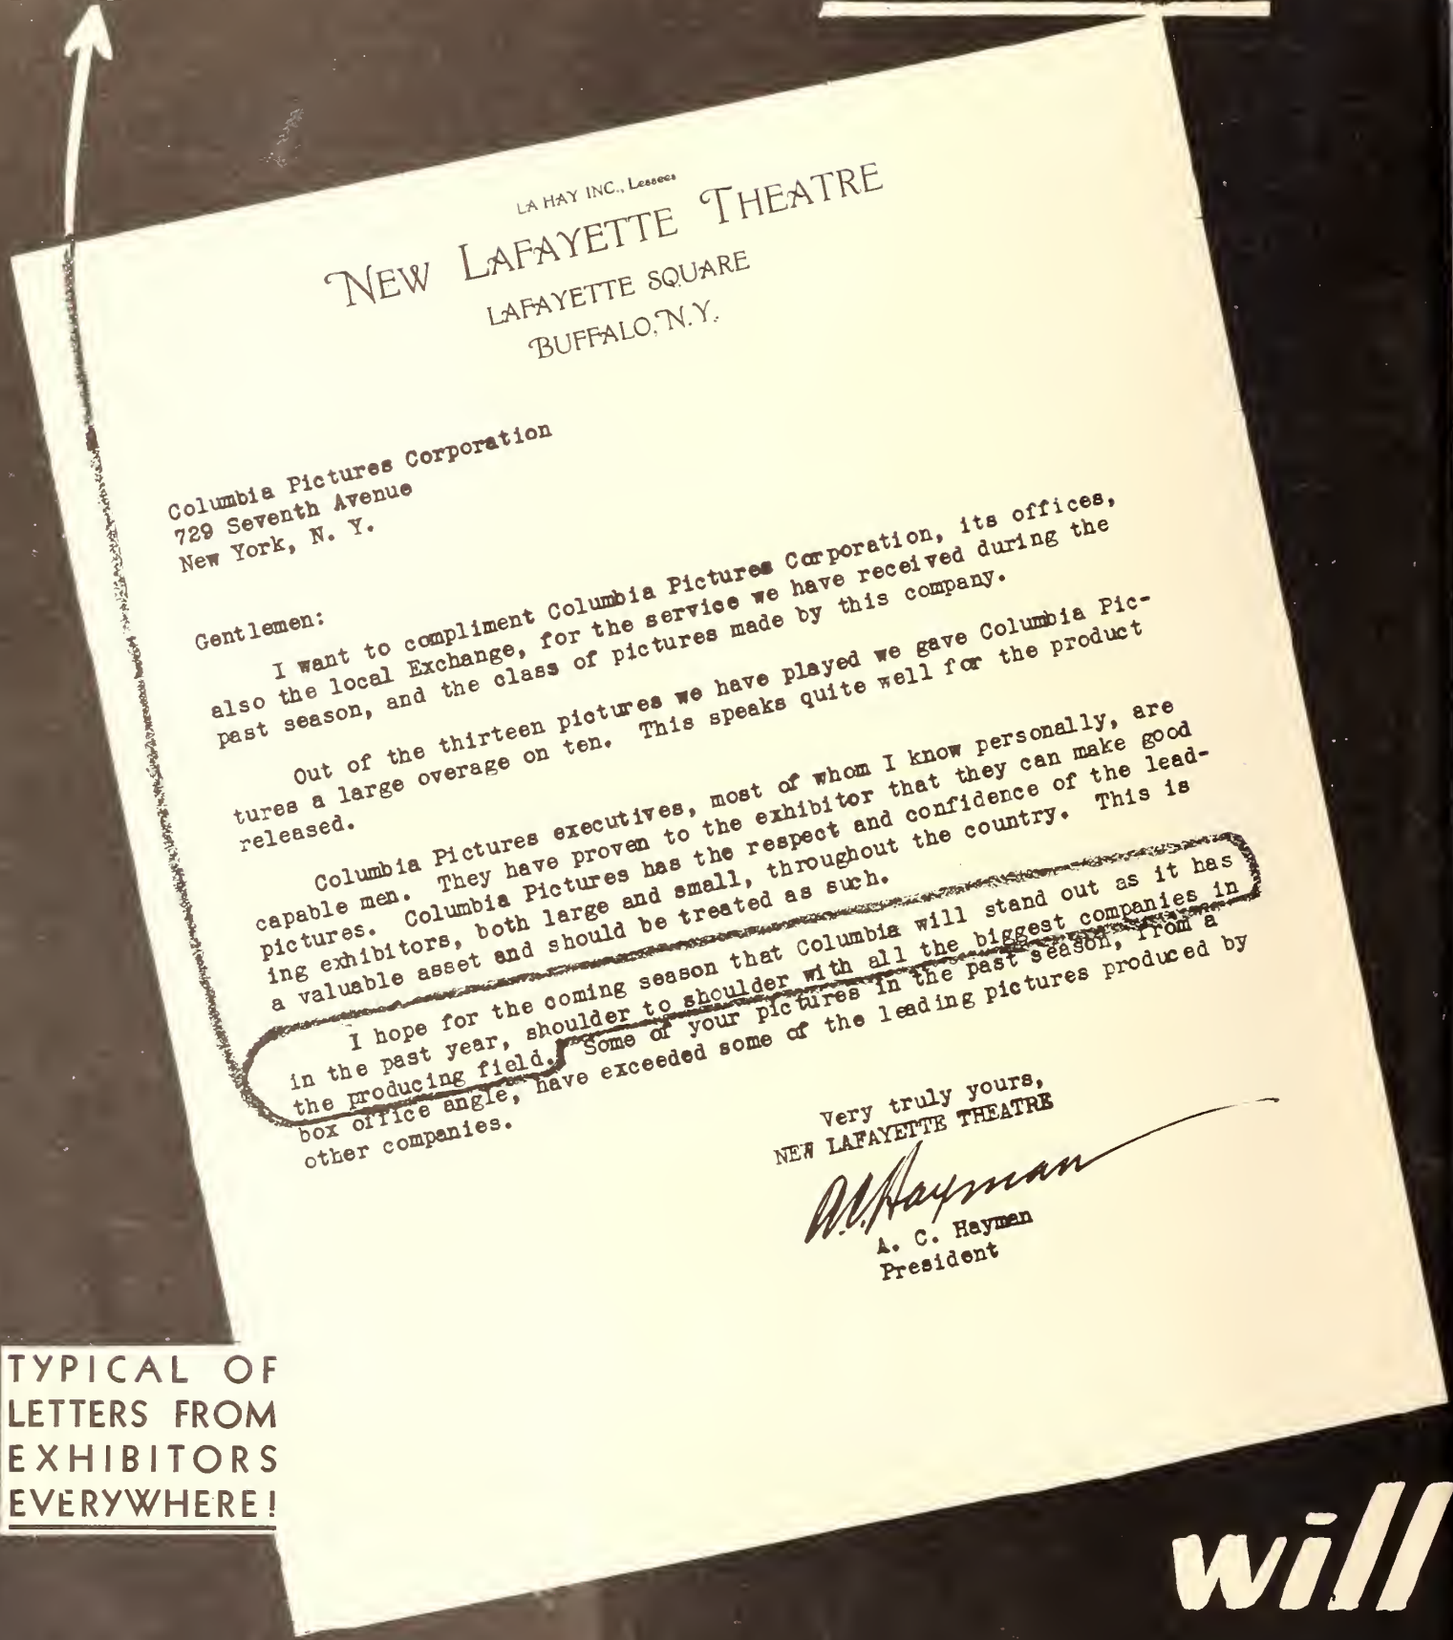
Fete Week Hurts Chicago Grosses

Theatre business in Chicago gained little from Jubilee Week, even houses in the Loop, where activities and demonstrations centered, falling off. Neighborhoods suffered severely at the box office. On "State Street Night," with an estimated 1,000,000 people in the Loop, houses had no use for people in the Loop, houses failed to reach capacity.

Free admission attractions in the Loop are held responsible for the poor showing. Neighborhood house operators, as a result of entertainment centering in the Loop, generally reported business at its lowest point of the year.

Maberry Has 2 Of Proposed Chain



Cecil E. Maberry, former general sales manager for Columbia, is making rapid progress with his new circuit of Missouri theatres, the latest of which, the "Lou-Mo" has been opened in Louisiana, Mo. This, with his Strand, in Vandalia, Mo., forms the nucleus of a proposed string to cover the entire Northeastern part of the state.

The "Lou-Mo" is a two-story structure with stores. It is equipped with RCA Photophone and has a capacity of 750 seats.

Louisiana has been without a theatre for the past year, residents being forced to drive to neighboring towns for pictures.

The publicity and exploitation campaign for the opening was handled by Dan Roche, of Chicago.

Gentlemen:

I want to compliment Columbia Pictures Corporation, its offices, also the local Exchange, for the service we have received during the past season, and the class of pictures made by this company.

Out of the thirteen pictures we have played we gave Columbia Pictures a large overage on ten. This speaks quite well for the product released.

Columbia Pictures executives, most of whom I know personally, are capable men. They have proven to the exhibitor that they can make good pictures. Columbia Pictures has the respect and confidence of the leading exhibitors, both large and small, throughout the country. This is a valuable asset and should be treated as such.

I hope for the coming season that Columbia will stand out as it has in the past year, shoulder to shoulder with all the biggest companies in the producing field. Some of your pictures in the past season, from a box office angle, have exceeded some of the leading pictures produced by other companies.

Very truly yours,

Daddy Long Legs

(Fox)

Strong Attraction

One of the best Cinderella stories ever written (and the whole world loves a Cinderella tale) has reached the talking screen in "Daddy Long Legs" with two of the most popular stars and a splendid supporting cast to put it over. Janet Gaynor does the best job she has done since "Seventh Heaven" and Warner Baxter gives another of his smooth, satisfying performances as the "Daddy Long Legs" to Miss Gaynor's Judy Abbott.

Made famous on the stage by Ruth Chatterton, and on the silent screen by Mary Pickford, the lovable orphaned Judy returns once more as an ideal character for Janet Gaynor. To all of the best elements of the stage story have been added a smart modern treatment and excellent dialogue. Under the direction of Alfred Santell, Fox has given the picture all that could be given it in the way of settings and production.

Equally as important, it is one of the rarest of entertainment types, a picture that will satisfy almost anyone. It is good for the high school trade, for the family trade, for the downtown trade or the neighborhood trade. If you like your pictures smart there is plenty of smartness; if you like some tears prepare to shed them; if you prefer laughs you'll get your money's worth. And it is clean as a whistle from the fade-in to the fade-out.

Add to the above portion Una Merkel, that Southern youngster who is most excellent as a screen comedienne; Claude Gillingwater, who does the old butler-secretary, Riggs, to perfection; John Arledge, who knows his collegiate stuff, and a bright youngster named Kendall MacComas who pretty nearly steals the orphanage sequence, and you have something to talk about.

"Daddy Long Legs" is the story of the little orphan girl, Judy Abbott, who never remembered her parents, but has grown to beautiful young girlhood in an orphanage. There she is seen and adopted by Jervis Pendleton, a wealthy young bachelor who never permits her to know who is responsible for her good fortune. She only knows him by the name she has given him, "Daddy Long Legs." He sends her to a fashionable girls' boarding school where, in spite of her past, she becomes the most popular girl in the school. At her commencement she graduates magna cum laude and is the class valedictorian. Of course Pendleton finds himself in love with her, and permits her finally to meet her "Daddy Long Legs" in one of the cleverest fade-out scenes in a long time.

Those concerned with this production are to be congratulated that they did not do the obvious thing, give the audience reel after reel of orphanage sob stuff. There is just enough to plant the reason why Judy Abbott is there and why she deserves a better break. Pendleton comes into the picture, sees her plight and she is whisked away into a charming collegiate atmosphere in which she blooms like a rose. The kid stuff and the collegiate stuff are happily done, with an understanding of the psychology of both. Sonya Levien, the adaptor, did an admirable piece of work in bringing the story right up to the minute, aided by S. N. Behrman, who is credited with the additional dialogue. As has been said before, Alfred Santell has directed the production most intelligently.

Comedy, cartoon or musical shorts will do well with this film.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Alfred Santell. Story by Jean Webster. Adaptation by Sonya Levien. Additional dialogue by S. N. Behrman. Photographed by Lucien Andriot. Sound Engineer, Donald Flick. Release date, June 14, 1931.

The Good Bad Girl

(Columbia)

Thrills and Comedy

Despite the fact that this is another gangster film, it has elements in it of the type of material which should prove popular entertainment for most audiences. There is comedy to counterbalance the dramatic bits, and a thrill or two which adds to the effectiveness of the film. But it is by no means a picture for children to view.

The story concerns a gangster's girl, who attempts to leave the life of crime, which has been hers by marrying into a wealthy family, via the scion of a fortune, at just the moment when her former fiance is the object of a police search for a murderer. When he is captured shortly after, he naturally believes the girl had informed the police and then deserted him.

In an effort to save the life of her husband, she visits the murderer. But the newspapers give away her secret, and she leaves her husband to go to work after her baby is born. The murderer makes good an escape from jail, and tries to kill the girl, but, of course, she is saved at exactly the right moment. The expected reconciliation with her husband follows.

Mae Clark does an exceptionally fine piece of dramatic acting as the heroine, and Jimmy Hall is almost equally as competent in his role opposite. Robert Ellis does well in the heavy role, and Marie Prevost supplies much of the comedy. The rest of the cast is satisfactory. The direction of R. William Neill is good.

The Lawyer's Secret

(Paramount)

Drama That Clicks

"The Lawyer's Secret," through intelligent handling both in story and acting, becomes a thoroughly delightful and interesting picture. The preview audience which greeted it found it much to their liking and it rates as very good screen fare.

Charles Rogers, formerly known as "Buddy," gives the surprise performance of the picture. As the weak brother who is an accomplice to a murder, Rogers has a role that even a veteran performer would find difficult. And he plays it for all its worth, turning out a performance that is most creditable and shows he has unpredictable possibilities along dramatic lines. Clive Brook and Richard Arlen are two other important members of the cast whose work is outstanding. Fay Wray and Jean Arthur supply the love interest and do it well.

The direction by Louis Gasnier and Max Marcin is good. The story is heavy with suspense and drags a bit at times. Further cutting may eliminate this.

The story, by James Hilary Finn, has a clever plot and it is well told. Rogers as the rich lad who spends his time in gambling becomes involved with Francis McDonald in a murder. Richard Arlen, a sailor, is arrested and found guilty of the crime through a chain of circumstantial evidence. He is to be hanged for the murder of which he is innocent. Rogers has confided in his attorney, Brook, who is engaged to Miss Wray. Brook cannot break a client's confidence and finds himself in a tough spot. All works out, though, when Arlen's pals and Miss Arthur, his girl, find the Weazel (MacDonald) and he admits his guilt.

Rogers, confessing, goes to the penitentiary to serve a short term, while MacDonald is to be hanged.

Rogers' role has no love interest in it and is a part much unlike anything he has ever done.

Use strong comedy shorts here for best results.

Monsters of the Deep

(Talking Picture Epics)

Interesting

The interest of this film lies not in story, of which there is necessarily little or none. It is a saga of the deep sea fish of the Southern waters, telling the story of big game under the surface and some little of the commercial fishing, which is in itself a fascinating pursuit.

Harold Austin and his party, off on a trip of exploration for a closeup of the lives of the giants of the ocean, meet with adventure, color and a good deal of excitement. The waters off the west coast of Mexico and Magdalena Bay form the locale.

The group go aboard the ships of the great tuna fleet, and look in on the pursuit and capture of tuna, weighing anywhere from a few pounds to one ton. A particularly interesting part of the film is the picturization of several battles which the party has with sharks. The climax is extremely effective, being the record of the killing and capture of a devil fish, after a keenly exciting battle.

On the whole, the film is splendid entertainment, fast moving, and interesting, but of course, lacking story continuity.

Balance your program with dramatic shorts, in particular, with perhaps a comedy or cartoon.

Produced by Harold Austin. Distributed by Talking Picture Epics. Photography by Jack Draper. Film Editor Grace McKee. Release date May 15, 1931. Footage 5300. Running time 59 minutes.

Defenders of the Law

(W. Ray Johnston)

Weak

This is a weak and altogether too sugary film to be rated as anything in particular beyond just another motion picture. It is a police and gangster story in which the police, of course, get all the glory, and the gangsters are foiled.

The principal gang leader is supposed to represent, apparently, one of the country's most notorious strayers from the straight and narrow, but the role is rather badly overdone, consequently being highly ineffectual. The captain of the police is, naturally enough, in love with the daughter of the leading official of the town, and the gangster is his war buddy.

He threatens to clean up the town, but it is too unreal and obviously fictitious to be anything like true. John Holland plays the hero and, of course, he gets his man in the most approved style. Also he gets the girl, played by Catherine Dale Owen, who incidentally has very little to do. Even the gang of henchmen surrounding the leader cannot stop the brave police captain.

(Falcon)

Good For Juveniles

The first of the Falcon Production, Boy Scouts series of shorts, stacks up as first-rate amusement for the younger generation. There is plenty of comedy and story material in the piece which has been well developed. In the cast Scout Edward Royale and Rita Darwyn have the leads, with Silverlight, thoroughbred pony stallion, in a prominent part. The story concerns a ball game and what happens when the losers try to get even with the winners, by seriously injuring the team's manager. How Boy Scouts are equipped for emergencies is plainly brought out. The picture in no way is propaganda, but is capable of standing upon its own merits as entertainment. Direction and acting are satisfactory. For good clean entertainment this will fill the bill.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Believe It or Not—No. 9

(Vitaphone)

Good

This number of the series, though excellent in subject matter and satisfactory in presentation, has a bit too much Mr. Ripley in evidence. The odd incidents and events are told and pictured, for the most part through a picture camera, at a drawing room lecture. One of the oddities, a boy who plays the piano while wearing mittens, is seen performing. Interesting and worth playing.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Handy Guy

(Vitaphone)

Only Fair

This is the debut of Earle Sande, famous jockey, on the screen. It should be his last appearance as well, for as an actor, he just isn't. The supporting cast is little better, and the story, naturally difficult, is weak. The race shots are newsreel pickups, and Sande is not shown closeup at all. Furthermore, he loses the race, but his girl comforts him. Running time 15 minutes.

The Bull Thrower

(Radio)

Funny

A humorous cartoon number, with Toby the Pup doing a bit of bull throwing for a change. Good lines throughout, but ends a trifle sharply when Toby takes a boat out of the moon. A good spot of amusement anywhere.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Real Estaters

(Paramount)

Fine

Smith & Dale play the lead in this comedy of two real estate men who are trying to sell lots located on an island used as a garbage dump. A young girl arrives and they attempt to sell her the property, but it develops that she is after the income tax report they failed to file. This after they had bragged about their business. The partners fight regularly and it is uproariously funny. The lines are vastly amusing and mostly new. This comedy should go over with almost any audience. A Broadway audience never stopped laughing. Ray Cozine directed.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Diamond Experts

(RKO Pathe)

Excellent

A Grantland Rice Sportlight, and as usual with these numbers, it is great stuff from the sports angle. Exhibitions by Ty Cobb, Jack Coombs, Dazzy Vance, and a group of scenes in which the Yankees and Athletics participate in New York are the meat of the matter. Each diamond star takes a turn telling something about the game and his position. The baseball fans will doubtless devour it, and anyone, sportingly inclined, should enjoy it.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Water Bugs

(RKO Pathe)

Great

Johnny Weismuller supplies the splendid exhibition of swimming and diving in this great sport subject, and Stubby Krueger does the comedy end of it. The season is perfect for it and the short is as good as anyone could ask for. Pretty bathing girls do no harm to the subject at all. The highlight is an underwater boxing match. A great number.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Mail Man

(Paramount)

Amusing

This easily rates as one of the most amusing of the Talkertoon series. The mail man travels far and wide, one of his visits being to Davy Jones' locker. The adventures are very funny and decidedly odd. The short keeps going at a fast pace and has more than a few laughs. Play it.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Against the Rules

Just Fair

Only a comedy and nothing more. Franklin Pangborn succeeds in gathering a few laughs with his impersonation of a woman. Ed Dearing as the detective is just what that has been since the film began. Tom Dugan is satisfactory and Wade Boetler does well enough as the hotel manager. The comedy gets by but that is all. —Running time, 19 minutes.

NEW ERPI MICROPHONE CUTS STUDIO TROUBLE

Bell Development Ready; W. E. Says It Is Less Affected by Moisture and Barometric Pressure

A new Western Electric microphone operating on a principle similar to that of the first telephone transmitter used by Alexander Graham Bell will be marketed by Electrical Research Products for use in recording talking pictures. The microphone, already in use in a number of studios for testing, and known as the Western Electric electrodynamic transmitter, possesses many improvements over the condenser type microphone generally used in recording until now. The new transmitter is a development of Bell Laboratories.

Less Affected by Moisture

Its use is said to eliminate several recording problems; one of which has been the difficulty in hiding the microphone from the view of the camera. The new microphone is smaller and its associated amplifier may be located as far as 200 feet from the microphone, making it much easier to hide from the view of the camera. The amplifier for the condenser microphone was built as an integral part of the microphone housing and made it extremely difficult to camouflage in many sets.

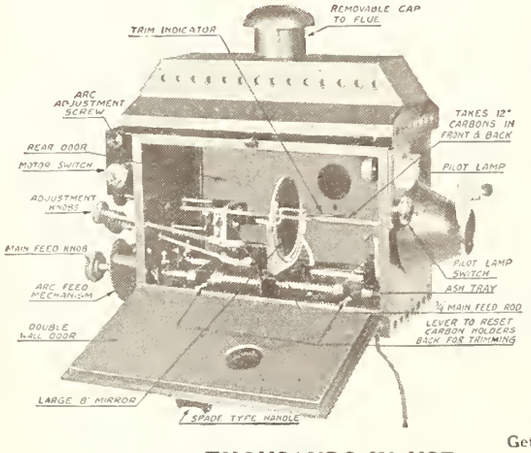
Other advantages claimed are that it is less affected by dust and moisture and need not be kept in a desiccator. It is unaffected by changes in temperature and barometric pressure. It is a further contribution in noiseless recording since its associated amplifier is quieter in operation. The transmission characteristics of the transmitter are superior and distortion caused by cavity resonance has been practically eliminated thus increasing quality and reality in recording. Increased volume is obtained since the transmitter and associated amplifier give from 10 to 15 decibels more overall gain than the condenser transmitter and amplifier.

The principle on which the transmitter operates is the inverse of that employed in the Western Electric 555-W receiver used in the Western Electric sound system. In this receiver or any dynamic loud speaker the magnet system is so constructed as to produce a circular air gap, across which extends a radial magnetic field, between the inner pole and the surrounding outer pole. In this air gap is situated a thin circular coil which is attached to the diaphragm. If a sound current is passed through this coil, the electrodynamic reaction between the current and the field will cause the coil to execute axial vibrations corresponding to the modulations of the sound current.

Permanent Magnet Used

Through the medium of the diaphragm and horn, or baffle, these vibrations reproduce the original sound. This action can be readily reversed; if a sound falls on the diaphragm, causing the diaphragm and coil to vibrate, there will be generated in the coil a small alternating voltage which corresponds to the impinging sound waves. This is the way in which the electro-dynamic transmitter operates and indicates the origin of its name.

The construction of the new transmitter is very similar to that of the 555-W receiver, except that instead of an electromagnet a permanent magnet of cobalt steel is used. There is, of course, no horn or baffle. The diaphragm if of thin duralumin. The coil is of edge-wound aluminum ribbon. The diaphragm is protected by means of a disc of perforated sheet metal mounted in front of it and this in turn is covered by a thin piece of black silk.



So far as is known this is the first time that the electro-dynamic principle has been used commercially in a transmitter.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 78

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 83—Exactly what amount of space on the film does the slit beam illuminate? Is the light from the slit of unvarying brilliancy when it reaches the film soundband? What happens to the beam of light after it has passed through the sound track? Is it still of unvarying brilliancy? What will the light beam on the photo-electrc cell side of the film be a reproduction of, insofar as concerns its brilliancy? Explain all this fully, please.

The question was: Should the theatre manager or projectionist feel obliged to alter the horn setting without the assistance of a service engineer, what should be done first? What is the best sound projector location? Tell us just how you would proceed to locate horns in a wide auditorium.

This one brought such a flood of correct answers that it seems impractical to print them all. I have had the matter checked up and find that every one of those credited from week to week with answering rightly are correct on this one, so I will just print the names of those who made good this time only, trusting the others will understand and excuse my action, taken to economize space.

I have selected the reply of Bill Doe as perhaps, everything considered, best for publication, though many of the answers were essentially equal in the matter of correctness and excellence. Brother Doe says:

"There is an excellent general rule which says sound projector positions should never be altered except when a service engineer be present, which applies of course only to such theatres as are regularly serviced. However, like all rules, this one may be deviated from, provided such diviation be carried forward carefully and only after it has been made possible to replace the projectors in their exact original position in event the experiment is not successful.

"This latter may be very easily done by marking the exact position of each projector (horn) before altering its position. It is best that the above quoted rule have this possibility of change, because of the fact that, though usua'ly service engineers are well trained men who give good service, still there nevertheless are exceptions. Anyhow they have not the time for as extended an observation as have the theatre people themselves. I would answer the first question, therefore, by saying the first act before moving any sound projector should be to carefully mark its position in such manner that it may be returned to its exact original position should it seem best to do so.

"The only correct sound projector position is that one which will give the most even possible sound distribution throughout the entire seating space of the auditorium, save possibly in the case of a very wide one having little front-to-back depth, where complete servicing of the extreme front side seats might result in relatively dead spots elsewhere.

"As to the last question, my own procedure would vary with the auditorium. If there were a balcony I think I would first experiment to see at just what up and down position the best results might be had for both the main floor and the balcony, favoring the main floor somewhat if it be found impossible to secure evenness in sound volume for both.

"Next, if the auditorium be a wide one I would position the sound projectors in such manner that the left ones would service the right side and vice versa. I would then proceed to so position the projectors (sound) that the most even possible sound be obtained all over the auditorium, leaving any lowness which may seem necessary at both the right and left, and evenly distributed as between the two. This I would do for the reason that seats there are occupied last of all as the theatre fills up, hence usually remain empty if there be empty seats anywhere.

"The foregoing, Mr. Richardson, is not designed to be anything except a rough outline of the main points. To treat of these subjects in complete detail would, I realize, require very much more space than is available in our most excellent department, from which I want to say I have derived a very great deal of benefit. My employer, Mr. Sam T. Roberts, reads both the weekly and monthly departments. He swears by both of them and the Bluebooks."

Note: Due to error of the makeup man the questions were left out for two weeks. He has been properly spanked, fed on bread and water for two days and has to go to bed early for a week. As to that last, I trust the strain will not prove too great!

INCANDESCENT EQUIPMENT

B. R. Johnson, Orpheum theatre, Kerrobert, Saskatchawan, Canada, says: "I will appreciate the benefit of your advice on the following: Am using incandescent equipment, the primary voltage of approximately 120 volts AC being used to 32 volts by a Sunbeam transformer. The 900 watt lamps are wired in series, and a special changeover device or rheostat permits of two primary steps of 18 and 20 amperes before the full amperage comes through.

"My experience with new lamps is that a great many, in fact two out of every three, burn out immediately they get the full amperage, notwithstanding the fact that they are carefully warmed up on the lower amperages. The lamps that survive the initial lighting last indefinitely, therefore I have put the cause of the trouble down to defective lamps. It is, however, practically impossible to get refunds from the factory, and it is a bit hard on the pocketbook.

"Do you find this the general experience with these lamps or is it that there is something defective with our methods?"

First of all, I do not see why the lamps should burn in series, since, if I understand you right, that would make both lamps burn all the time. Your case is to me a bit of a puzzle. I can see no earthly reason why one lamp should last indefinitely and another burn out immediately, unless there be some defect or weakness in the burned out lamp. Only for the fact that you say that when lamps have successfully withstood the initial operation they last for an indefinite period, I would advise you to check up on your voltage and see if it does not vary a lot, running considerably over at times.

I am going to print this, asking our readers who may have had some similar experience, if any there be, to write you directly. I know of no such general experience with Mazda lamps, and certainly it would not be tolerated. If any one feels able to help friend Johnson, let him write him direct.

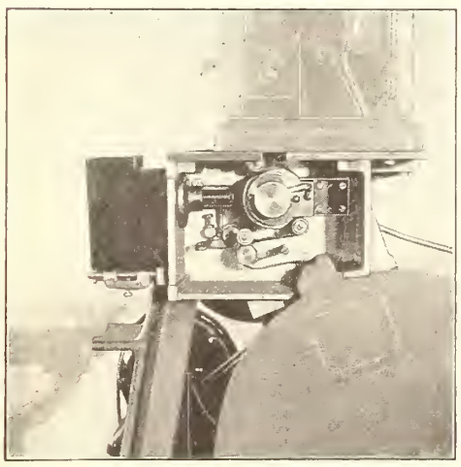
Project It Perfectly

May I be permitted to express my sincere compliments to Warner Brothers and Mr. George Arliss. I have viewed "The Millionaire," a Warner Brothers production starring Mr. Arliss, three separate times. It was enjoyed just as well the third time as the first.



I have been viewing motion pictures in large numbers for many years. In fact, to be exact, ever since the spring of 1905. In all that fairly long period "The Millionaire" is, so far as I am able to recollect, the very first production upon which I felt unable to set forth any criticism of any sort whatsoever.

I would suggest to all projectionists placing this production before theatre audiences that they make every possible effort—not merely a perfunctory one, but a real effort to project both picture and sound perfectly.

Of course that should always be done, but just the same it would be especially unfortunate to have such a really magnificent production marred by poor projection of either the sound or the picture.

Through courtesy of Warner Brothers I sat through the screening of the above named production in Warner's Winter Garden two times, and again once in the Beacon theatre. I must compliment the projection staff of both of these theatres. The results in both picture and sound were excellent.

SYNCROFILM

NOW MADE FOR MOTIOGRAPH

Motiograph owners may now have the same perfected sound reproduction that Simplex owners have been enjoying through Syncrofilm.

The same fundamental principle is employed—four times the usual amount of light is thrown on the photo cell through the sound track. The reproduction, as usual, is greatly improved.

The same marvelously fine workmanship is found in the Syncrofilm for Motiograph. The film moves entirely on rollers, eliminating scratches and wear. The model for Motiograph has been thoroughly tested both in the laboratory and in daily use.

Improved reproduction is guaranteed. You know what that means at the box office. Send now for information.

DeForest Makes Deaf Device; Sees Television In Two Years

Dr. Lee DeForest, in Los Angeles, has announced a new "theatrephone" invention, which he promises will permit deaf or partially deaf persons to enjoy talking films thoroughly. A small microphone is placed close to the sound horn back of the screen, with wires running to the seats.

DeForest said he believed within two years commercially practical television will be available to the average home at small cost.

Square D Company Markets A New Power Filter Unit

The Square D Company of Detroit has put on the market a new power filter unit, designed to supply noiseless D.C. power from the ordinary A.C. line.

There are no moving parts in the power filter unit, the action being entirely electrical, and, according to the company, resulting in little or no depreciation and low maintenance costs.

Television Co. Opens in New York

Short Wave and Television Corp. of Boston has leased the 20th floor in the County Trust Building at 14th St. and 8th Ave., New York.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

A comparison of two weeks' grosses in the first four cities in the following tabulation—Albany, Baltimore, Boston and Buffalo—reveals a decided steadiness in the motion picture business, with only a slight variation from week to week in receipts.

During the "Previous Week" the theatres in these cities did a gross business of $396,265, with receipts of $399,870 for the "Current Week." The gross at the Metropolitan in Boston accounted for most of the $3,000 increase over the "Previous Week."

MUSIC AND TALENT

MUSIC PUBLISHERS CUT PRICE 38%

Organs Prospering On West Coast

While many theatre organs are still silent, an increased number are being placed in commission again and organ solos are being featured in picture programs.

E. P. Foote, secretary of the San Francisco Organists' Club, notes the trend toward greater appreciation of organ music and says that as large a percentage of organists is working here as in any other part of the country. He suggests that the organ can be made a box-office attraction whenever it is properly advertised to the public, but that this is now seldom done. Real improvement along this line will not come until theatre owners make a worthwhile effort to get some return from the large investment in silent instruments, he says.

Ed. S. Moore, organist at the San Francisco California theatre, is winning a good following since the organ supplanted the orchestra, and Eddie Sellen is winning honors at the Paramount. Baron Hartsough is featuring organ solos at the T. & D., Oakland, and Floyd Wright has become popular at the Fox California, Berkeley.

Stage Shows Out In 4 Texas Towns

Publix and the RKO Southern Corporation have agreed to run on a straight picture policy during the summer months in four key cities in Texas: San Antonio, Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth. Ruling goes into effect May 21.

Orchestras and stage bands will be dispensed with, but organists will be retained. Box office success may result in the policy becoming permanent.

Fox Switches F. & M. Staff

George A. Smith has been appointed company manager of Fanchon and Marco's "Great Raymond" Idea, beginning at the Fox Wilson, Fresno, Cal.

Samuel Stratton has been assigned company manager of Fanchon and Marco's "Submarine" Idea, joining it at the Fox in St. Louis.

Fanchon and Marco have appointed Samuel Stratton company manager of "Submarine" Idea, starting at the Fox, St. Louis.

Louis Lissner has been appointed company manager of "Moonlight Revels," commencing at Fox theatre, Philadelphia.

David Ross

Mr. Ross, the popular musical conductor of the Mastbaum Symphony Orchestra, Philadelphia, has the distinction of conducting the largest theatre orchestra in the world. Many of Ross' old friends will remember him as "Dave Silverman" that is, those of his friends who worked with him when he was General Musical Director for Skouras Brothers in St. Louis or out on the west coast where his wide knowledge of scoring pictures got him the post of musical director for First National Pictures and Warner Bros. Pictures. He was one of the best known musical directors on the coast and did some of the finest scoring of pictures of any of the many directors out there. He led the orchestra at the Earle, Philadelphia, for four months and for the past six months has been at the Mastbaum, where, through his wide knowledge of music, he has been unusually successful in his presentations of novelty and symphonic overtures.

New Director at Shea's

Wilye Stahl, Publix orchestra director, will succeed John Ingram as director at Shea's Buffalo.

Paine Is Named Chairman Of Association

Sheet Music in the Future Will Sell For 25 Cents Instead of 40 Cents a Copy

By ED DAWSON

A movement which should lead to wider sales of sheet music, resulting in a greater popularity for it, has been adopted by the Music Publishers' Protective Association.

Action was taken at the annual meeting of the organization at the Hotel Astor.

Included in the publishing houses announcing reductions are:

Irving Berlin, Inc., De Sylvia, Brown & Henderson, Donaldson, Douglas & Gumble, Remick Music Corporation, Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., M. Witmark & Sons, and others.

"This reduction in the price of popular music," the association announced, "is in line with price reductions in other lines of merchandise, and is the contribution of the popular publishers to the 'back to the piano' movement, which movement is growing with great rapidity throughout the country."

At the annual meeting of the Music Publishers' Protective Association the following men were elected directors:

Louis Bernstein, E. F. Bitner, Ben Bornstein, Saul Bornstein, Robert Crawford, Gustave Schirmer, W. G. Douglas, Max Dreyfuss, Walter Fischer, Jerome Keit, Jack Mills, M. Winkler.

John Gregg Paine was re-elected chairman of the board.

"Mr. Paine in his annual report to the association," the report said, "pointed out a very great decrease in the sheet music business, indicating that it was from 50 to 60 per cent below normal at the present time, and further reported a very decided decrease in the sale of talking machine records and player piano rolls, stating that from returns to the publishers in the way of royalties from the manufacture and sale of such instrumentalities it would appear that the talking machine business and the player piano business was in even a worse situation than the sheet music business.

"However, it was pointed out to the publisher members of the association that the demand for music is probably greater at the present time than at any time in the history of the country. The difference, however, lies in the fact that while heretofore the demand was for the tangible product in the way of sheet music, or talking machine rec-

STAGE SHOWS

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week ending May 22

Although not a unit show, Bob Robinson, as m.c., cavorts about the stage and wisecracks ahead of each act under title of "master salesman" until time for his own offering.

Sidney Lang opens the show with trick and fancy skating, assisted by the three Emeralde Sisters and Patti Lee. The act opens in full stage with fancy back drop, the three girls, attired in hoop skirts, working in blackface. Second special drop depicting a military camp, gives the trio plenty of opportunity to put over military maneuvers on rollers. Lang and Miss Lee come in for a good share of difficult turns, some of which appear fraught with bodily danger in their execution.

Sid Gold and Don Raye, dancers, on No. 2, have no difficulty in immediately selling their steps which are replete with rhythm. Solo and duet dancing are featured, although the chatter preceding their impression of an amateur act detracts from their otherwise high class and enjoyable pedalistic efforts.

Leatrice Joy, screen actress, making a personal appearance as headliner, follows in an offering labeled "A Series of Moods," assisted by an unbilled gent at the grand. Aside from a few vocal numbers, her work is mostly of the recitational type accompanied by various facial contortions. Her closing number, in which she gives a dramatic portrayal of a night club artist, was especially good.

Bob Robinson, on next to closing, is aided and abetted by Frances Lee and Daddy Cunningham, the latter, who, according to announcement, is an ex-doorman of the Palace, New York, is 74 years old, although as agile and enthusiastic in his dancing and ground tumbling as one of half his years. The turn is a farce throughout, with Barney Graff introduced late in the turn for a series of solos on the piccolo and a few dancing turns.

Smith and Dale, of the old Avon Comedy Four, and now in pictures, occupy the closing spot in a comedy sketch with Robert Pitkin, Jean Mann and Adele Carples. The act employs two special drops, one the deck of a ship and the other a stateroom interior. Wise-cracking predominates throughout the number, and the customers relished it at the first show.

The Publix unit, "Miniatures" made a hit, with real vaudeville and a mixed chorus with a wardrobe unexcelled.

Opening on a full stage, unobstructed save by the stage band in summer uniforms of white panties and shirts ditto, Val and Ernie Stanton, patter team, enlightened the audience with scores of wise-cracks which went over big.

They were followed by Julia Curtis, billed as the lady with many voices. The act, new here, fooled even many of the hard-boiled first-nighters and the critics of the local press as well.

The Three Jacks, three lively steppers, knocked the lining out of the stage floor in a series of fancy steps. This act received several hands.

The Twelve Southern Belles, ladies of the ensemblage danced and did a variety of marches that did credit to the producer.

Herbie, organist, is on a vacation. In his absence Ray McNamara is presiding at the console and is delivering the goods in a series of novelties.

The current film is William Powell in "Ladies' Man," which is giving satisfaction.

"In a Clock Store" is played by the orchestra under the direction of Don Wilkins as a prelude to Fanchon & Marco's "Moroccan" Idea. The Idea opens with a Moroccan street scene with donkeys and goats being led across stage by natives in bright costumes.

James Gaylord, baritone, sings "Where My Caravan Has Rested," while Ferdna, hypnotist, raises a young lady while she lies in a hypnotic state.

The 12 street dancers next present a veil dance, which is followed by Hadji Ali, who drinks a bowl full of water and then expels it. He also drinks water and then kerosene, which he expels upon a flame and later extinguished with the water he originally drank.

The chorus in its next number is attired in white costumes with red-lined coats. They perform in an entertaining manner and are followed by Sherry Louise, soprano, who gives an excellent song exhibition. Gaylene, danseuse, next comes upon the scene mounted atop a camel and dances in a thoroughly fine manner.

Al Hassen's "Blue Streaks" wind up the Idea with a wealth of exotic tumbling and acrobatics.

Salt Lake Orpheum

Week ending May 13

Headline honors are shared by Galla-Rini, accordionist and "One-Man Band," which acts are both very well received. The Three Swifts, is clever comedy manipulations of Indian clubs, and Billy Kelly with the three Paige Sisters, who have an uproarious novelty skit called "Taking the Heir," also receive equal recognition.

The stage presentation also includes Audrey Wykoff in a dance number; the St. Johns Trio, gymnasts; Kane and Ellis in songs and comedy; Carl Norris, with a group of performing monkeys, and Tom Kelly in songs.

The bill presents a galaxy of music, dancing and fun, in addition to the feature, "Born to Love," Constance Bennett.

ords, the demand now is for the rights surrounding the copyright, which rights are desired by the radio broadcasting companies, by the electrical transcription companies, and by the motion picture companies.

"With the demand for music as great as it is at the present time in these fields, Mr. Paine stated that the future of the music business did not look at all serious, but it is necessary to carefully study these fields in order that the owners of copyrights might intelligently merchandise their rights therein.

"Mr. Paine also pointed out the fact that there was a very decided movement on foot to have individuals personally perform musical compositions, which for want of a better name he termed the 'back to the piano' movement. The movement is being fostered by the great musical interests throughout the country, and by the educational interests because of their realization of the great effect that the personal performance of music has in character building."

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Charlie Hamp, said to be the highest salaried star in radio, and who is now appearing on six programs each week at WBBM, started his wage-earning life as a grocery clerk. "Big Boy," as he was called even in those early days, refused to keep his mind on the flour and potatoes. Each evening he added to a meager income with an orchestra job. At the age of 20 he advanced to musical comedy stock. And then came the war—after serving 14 months in France he gave vaudeville a try and came admittedly close to the breadline, and then opportunity knocked. Hamp was trying his hand at announcing at KNX, Hollywood. The scheduled talent failed to reach the studio in time and he was forced to go on the air with a "one-man radio" show. His success was instantaneous. As his success mounted he was called east for network broadcast. He is now under exclusive contract with the makers of Dr. Strasska's toothpaste, which, by the way, is my new toothpaste. . . . The Frohne Sisters, conceded to be one of the best girl quartets, are now appearing over station WBBM. . . . Eddie Niebar and his Seattle Harmony Kings are also over the above station and doing a very good job of it. . . . Since Clem and Harry are well known to radio fans for their enormous size—each weighing about 250 pounds—and since they are on a program for a well-known biscuit and cracker manufacturing company, it is with reason folks call them "the wise crackers who know their groceries." . . . Jim Holistein of the Jim and Bob Hawaiian guitar team, heard on a number of Chicago NBC programs, is one of 11 sons. All the brothers are guitar entertainers, but Jim is the only one appearing in the United States, the others being heard in and about Honolulu. . . . Lena, that character made popular to thousands of early morning listeners by those premier comedians, Gene and Glenn, over the NBC network, is happy. After weeks of reducing she confided to Glenn recently that she was "down to 301 now" with her infectious chuckle. . . . Because Al and Pete team boasted of his athletic ability he is getting what his partner calls the "Royal Razzberries." Al accepted the invitation of the NBC page boys to enter a game of baseball on the roof of the Merchandise Mart, atop which the Chicago studios are located, with the result that he hobbled about with a stiff back for several days. . . .

Prinz Divides Times Between Stage and Studio

Le Roy Prinz, who is staging the series of "Follies" at the Fox theatre, San Francisco, has a splendid opportunity of comparing the theatre with the studio. He has a contract with Cecil D. deMille which keeps him six months in Hollywood and leaves him free to do things for the stage the other six months.

In his work at the Fox so far he has designed his stage productions to fit in closely with the feature picture on the screen. His latest revue has the South Seas for its background in keeping with the picture, "Never the Twain Shall Meet."

Rehearsals and still more rehearsals is his rule and the smoothness of performances, even on opening days, are commented on. Stage productions are rehearsed four hours each day for four days before the opening and in addition Prinze directs the hanging of the scenery and the light effects.

STAGE SHOWS

Philadelphia Fox

Week ending May 14

Fanchon & Marco's "Moonlight Revels" occupy the stage. Curtain rises on a scene dominated by golden moon in a midnight sky. Tall buildings with illuminated windows make a suitable background for men and girls in evening dress. The revelers are having a high old time and their unison dancing is well executed.

Charles Brugge is a combination musician and acrobat. His most outstanding feat is to balance himself on his head then play his violin in that position.

Curry and Brown can dance, but the remarkable thing about them is the goofy postures and expressions which they assume. A funny combination.

Three Melvin Brothers also appear as clowns, wobbling aimlessly about the stage between acts but showing perfectly trained and co-ordinated muscles in action. In fact their excellent acrobatic work is the best feature of the program and they deserved the enthusiastic applause which they received.

Weston and Lyon pull a spicy line of jokes and wise cracks. Miss Lyon can sing, dance and play a mandolin. Weston also sings.

The Sunkist Beauties appear in interesting make-up. The most unusual is an ensemble in which they enter as witches behind a semi-transparent drop, with a black shadow suggesting the cauldron about which the witches gather. When the drop rises the ensemble dance on broomsticks while Freda Sullivan does some clever acrobatics.

Pierce and Lazelle are tap dancers of unusual ability who received applause for their individual stunts as well as their unison tapping.

Max Bradfield and the Fox Orchestra present a beautiful rendition of the prologue to Pagliacci, afterwards playing the accompaniment as Richard Bonelli, of the Chicago Civic Opera, sings the aria in a short film.

Ron and Don conduct a successful organ songfest of old, familiar waltz tunes.

Oklahoma City Warner

Week ending May 15

Presenting "A Timely Sermon," Joe Browning headlines by himself and proved to be just what the Oklahoma City public needed in a way of change from the usual routine of tap dancing and blues singing. Browning, rigged out as a country parson minus teeth, spends 15 minutes singing his comic sermon, which contains some worthwhile jibes at the modern generation. There is little time for applause since he keeps the audience laughing and permits no let-up in his lines until he leaves the stage. Annette Anderson, the mistress of ceremonies, brings him on with "Some people say Browning's crazy—but I'll let you judge for yourself."

If there was some way of convincing the audience of fairly intelligent people that he is Russian, Paul Tiesen's Russian troupe would probably head the bill. Norma Gallo, who looks Irish enough, does some good adagio and acrobatic dancing, but Oklahoma City has seen acrobatics for the last many months. Miss Gallo is the feminine pulchritude of the Russian troupe. Alfred Brown, also on the Tiesen act, wows them with some perfectly keen American novelty dancing such as mimic ice skating and the like. The act's music is highly commendable.

The Nine Kikutas, a Japanese tumbling troupe, receive much applause for their stuff, which is really good, but standard. Millard and Marlin do not click as a comedy team, which may be due to the Warner orchestra, which fails to register as an organized band this week. A local act, the Sooner Girls, is average.

ORGAN SOLOS

DON & KAY (Staten Island, N. Y., Paramount) presented for their first solo at the twin consoles of this house, a clever, novel and very well-played novelty, entitled, "Sleepy Time Moods." Both organs rose, simultaneously as Kay (at right and Don at left consoles) played a "peppy" arrangement of "Sleep, Sleep, Sleep." Little, demure Miss Kay made the first announcement, via "mike" that they would play that favorite, "Sleepy Town Express!" Word slides were superimposed on a scene of a train as Kay played the melody and Don played many novel and natural train effects on his organ. They followed with the playing of "Sleepy Time Gal," (this was played in most pleasing and harmonious combinations) then, "Asleep in the Deep" as a pedal cadenza (modern lighting effects around the base of the organs enhanced this bit). The next song, "Please Go Way and Let Me Sleep" was presented in a most unusual way. It was first played as a straight spot solo and then presented with a comedy cartoon film with words for the audience to sing, designated with a bouncing ball. At the show caught, few people were in the house but these few did sing and apparently enjoyed the entire novelty. This fine team closed their solo with the playing of "Here Comes the Sun," which the audience joined in singing.

ADA RIVES (Loew's State, New Orleans), plays the role of interlocutor this week in her solo "Minstrel Follies," with the audience playing chorus and singing, after some urging, the opening number, "Alexander's Rag Time Band." This is followed by famous songs of famous minstrels with Bert Williams' popular, "I Ain't Go Nobody" taking the biggest hand. A whistling chorus of "Swanee River" is next with Miss Rives making the audience whistle and using her wood block to suggest the tap dance which is supposed to accompany it. The close gets off in great style with Dianah." Applause prolonged; one of Miss Rives' best solos.

DALE YOUNG (Indianapolis Fountain Square) opened the organ, which had been silent since the advent of talking pictures, with a community singing novelty celebrating the theatre's fourth anniversary. Young announced all the gags orally, via mike, placed on the organ console and connected to the stage horns. Young who is well-known to Indianapolis audiences (having been at the Circle for the past two years) had no difficulty in having this new audience join in the singing of the following songs: "Gigolo," "Cheerful Little Earful," "Take a Walk," a parody chorus on "Gigolo" and a closing chorus of "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." Applause was so tremendous that Young played "Sweet Jennie Lee" for an encore.

BETTY HAMMOND (New Orleans, Publix Strand) offers "My Public and Me" a song slide solo which brings in Miss Hammond's versatility as an entertainer. It opens with a short organ number, then Miss Hammond sings into the microphone, which is connected with the sound horns of the screen, a paraphrase of a popular melody which bespeaks the singing prowess of her public. This is followed by the audience's joining her in singing "When Your Love Has Gone," "Running Between the Rain Drops," and "Walking My Baby Back Home." A popular solo but one lacking the usual originality shown in Miss Hammond's work.

PRESTON SELLERS (Chicago Oriental) has turned to the newspapers for his organ solo background on the current program. The result is an original and diverting ten minutes of song that obviously pleases audiences. Sellers has combed the newspapers for items referring to music or song in any number whatever. With these news clippings, reproduced on the screen, for his starting point, Sellers has written his own version of their occurrence and set them to the tune of a popular song. His audiences join in on the singing of these original interpretations of the news of the day.

IRIS WILKINS (Fox's Wisconsin, Milwaukee) offers an organ concert rather than a selection of popular numbers. Her songs include "Sextette From Lucia," "Nola," and the conclusion of "Poet and Peasant." Well received.

"MAC" BRIDWELL (San Antonio RKO-Majestic) offered the following melodies: "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver," "Your Mother," "Tie Me to Your Apron Strings" and closed with the song slides, "Mother. The audience was not very quick to sing.

ADOLPH GOEBEL (Brooklyn Loew's Pitkin) who is guest organist at this house, presented as his opening community-singing novelty an entertaining solo entitled, "Favorite Tunes of Popular Stars of the Air!" Opening with a slide, explaining an interview with seven radio favorites who choose the following tunes, Goebel introduced each of them and their choices before playing the number. The first was: a straight spot solo of Ferdi-Grofe's modernistic composition, "Indigo" which Goebel played in concert style, and which was Paul Whiteman's choice. The next, Will Osborne's choice, was "Out of Nowhere" which was played for the audience to sing, and sing they did. The next, Lopez' choice was "Nola" which Goebel played as a piano and xylaphone solo. The next was Crawford's selection, "So Beats My Heart" which Goebel played in Crawford's own style. The next number was Ben Bernie's choice, "Whistling in the Dark." Two choruses of this, one novelty the other singing. Goebel closed with a special version to "You're the One I Care For" which was especially written by him for this audience. At the show caught Goebel's applause was so good that he rated an encore though he did not take it.

SINGING TALKING and PLAYING

JOHN HAMMOND

"Master of Melody"

St. George Theatre—Staten Island, N.Y.

Hello Everybody!

Well, I hear that Feist's new number, "Moonlight Saving Time" has already reached the top of the best selling list. . . . It has a swell tune and everybody's singing it. . . . Incidently Irving Kahal and Harry Richman are the composers. . . . Say, did you know that my kid sister Lillian Dawson is playing in a Publix unit? She is a crooning singer and has just finished doing a single over Loew and RKO vaud circuits. . . . Lillian is not really my sister but whenever we do see each other we greet each other as brother and sister and get quite a kick out of the surprised expressions on the faces of our friends when we greet one another that way. . . . Jimmy Clark's many friends will be happy to know that he is back in the New York office of M. Witmark & Sons at his old post. . . . Jimmy and "His Trowel" are well-known characters on the "street" and it's good to see him back here instead of in Philadelphia where he was Witmark's manager for the past six or eight months. . . . After being at the Brooklyn Paramount for the past year and a half (off and on) Rudy Vallee is going into the New York Paramount for about a month, with his Connecticut Yankees and is then going into George White's new "Scandals" but not with the Yanks . . . he will do a single . . . Kay Kyser and his orchestra, playing at the Golden Pheasant Restaurant in Cleveland, Ohio, and broadcasting nightly over WTAM open next week for a special engagement at the RKO Palace in Cleveland. . . . Lew Brown and Ray Henderson are currently engaged in the writing of book, lyrics and music for the forthcoming "Scandals." . . . The new "Scandals" will be the usual work of Brown and Henderson, which, as you've probably already heard, is the unusual in musical and theatrical circles . . . Need it be added that DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, Inc. will publish the score? . . . Two songs, both currently successful, both published by Remick Music Corp., both plaintive in tone, and both possessed of an identifying word are "When Your Lover Has Gone" and "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." "Gone" is the word common to both, but the past tense belies the way they are actually 'going' which way is Up and still more Up . . . H. W. Hanemann's collection of "Soft Boiled Ballads" has become a national fad and everyone is buying and singing these "heart-wrecking songs!" Vincent Lopez, currently at the Capitol introduced them from the St. Regis Ballroom via chain broadcasts and since then they have been featured in the choice spots on the air . . . Harms, Inc., are the publishers . . . Ernest Hauser, for the past seven years, or since the opening of the Texas theatre, San Antonio, has been musical conductor at that house . . . About ten years ago he was very well known in New York and this is the first trip he has made back here since then . . . all of his old cronies here thought he had gone where all good leaders go and could hardly believe their eyes when he dropped in to see them . . . Miriam Zack, former secretary to Benny Bloom of Irving Berlin's is now Maurice Workstel's secretary at the Workstel Studios . . . Adolph Goebel, formerly of the Atlanta and Springfield Paramount theatres was in town for a few days and got himself the job of Guest Organist at Loew's Pitkin theatre, Brooklyn, for an indefinite stay . . .He is now on his third week and doing great . . .

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

IN THE weaving of any strong fabric certain threads stand out as dominant notes in the theme of the pattern. They may run inconspicuously for an occasional space, in their formation of design, but they appear consistently binding the whole together.

Within the past month we have seen the forecasting of motion picture pattern for the coming year in its processes of development. The leading companies have spread the motifs of their plan with elaborate announcements and gay coloring through the pages of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. From the viewpoint of a public that is beginning to pick and choose its entertainment with more selectiveness than ever before in the history of the industry these announcements and magnificent color plates are of more than usual interest.

The Large Question

Mr. Martin Quigley, publisher of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD facing the problem which the new schedule of pictures presents asks, in a pertinent editorial, "Is the Motion Picture Business Getting Anywhere?" Then we turn the pages of the season's announcements as they appear in the last few issues of this periodical. Plate after plate is a masterpiece of the printer's art; prints like photogravures worthy of frames; color in royal splendor; tints as delicate as if they had been rubbed in by sensitive finger of the artist. But subject matter? There arts stops. Do these advertisements really stand for the type of picture they represent? And if they do, what has happened to the industry's Code of Morals in all of this?

The Critical Public

Your patrons are beginning to weary, at last, of the over-sexed picture and the endless gangster rackets. They have demonstrated this in a great many cities recently where a feature heralded as a sensation has suddenly gone as flat as a pricked balloon. In two Canadian cities within the past week two gun-men pictures expired without a gasp on the theatre managers' hands. These are the straws that point the way the wind is blowing. It will pay you to watch the signals!

Circus Psychology

The showmanship that gathers together the World's Greatest Show under the big top in any city might teach the makers of motion pictures a lesson. The circus succeeds on variety. It does not attempt to give its audiences a large quantity of any one kind of entertainment—the successors of Mr. Barnum know better than that!

But in motion pictures we move in cycles. We have sex, and more sex, and then SEX, in a whole series of Illicits, Indiscreets, Tarnished Ladies, and Indiscretions. We had the Office Wife theme done to death in a litany that included Sex in Business, Beauty and the Boss, Behind Office Doors, the Secretary's Secret—all as much alike as hat checks in a cloak room.

And for the gangsters . . . the list has been too long to compile. Last week in Brooklyn every large motion picture house in the down town area was featuring a gangster theme. So the public, fed to satiety on the too steady diet wearies of its movies . . . and goes to the circus.

Let Us Have Comedies!

On the radio broadcasts on better motion pictures sponsored by one national group of club women on twelve stations over the country, the question was asked recently, "What type of picture are you most anxious to see made in the coming year?" The answers came back in a flood: "COMEDIES!" The second Question asked, "What have you most wearied of on the screen?" And the replies came in volume, "Gangsters—and women's secrets." Children everywhere are clamoring for children's pictures—there is an active market for more "Skippy's" and a few more "Connecticut Yankee's."

Endorsed Lists Are a Help

The theatre man who is watching the trend of affairs that are affecting his business—the statements of Martin Quigley; the viewpoints of Nicholas Schenck, interviewed in last week's Herald, the re-actions of the public to the current productions; the reports of the organized club women and parent teacher groups who represent the intelligent cross section of your public, will find these the threads that are dominant in the pattern of motion picture making!

The endorsed lists of pictures issued by the leading club groups engaged in the work of previewing and classifying films will help you in evaluating the sugar coated ads which describe the pictures you are considering for your theatre. A postal card addressed to the HERALD will bring you one, or all of the following lists as a free service each month.

General Federation of Women's Clubs.
Daughters of the American Revolution.
Parent-Teachers, Los Angeles Branch.
Y. M. C. A.
International Federation of Catholic Alumnae.

Billboard Revision Watched

The city's billboard ordinance at Oakland, Cal., is being revised and theatre interests are watching carefully to check adverse restrictions.

Narrow Film Machine Out

Siemens Co. of Berlin will shortly market special apparatus for recording and reproducing narrow width film.

Producers, Take Note!

A smashing attack upon "The Current Cult of Cynicism" featured the commencement exercises for a class of 2,679 graduates at the University of California at Berkeley, Cal. It was an interesting commentary of intellectual youth upon the trend of the times in literature, the stage and the screen, and was delivered by Garff B. Wilson, honor student.

Expressing his disgust for the cynicism which he said was so general today, the young orator said:

"We see it in the literature of the time—in plays written with one eye on the box office and with the other on the police station.

"We see it in movies about women who thought it right to go wrong; in stories which go just beyond decency and stop just short of wit.

"We see it in the writers who are not concerned with women of the past, but women with a past who do not look to normal experiences for their inspiration.

"The world war crystallized the belief that we had been betrayed by deceptive standards. But this, I think, is not the case. If one set of values has been found wanting, must we then believe that there is no possibility for perceiving another set? If some cannot have faith in a future life, must we all ,then, cease having faith in this life?"

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

A MESSAGE TO THE CLUB From
MARTIN QUIGLEY

THIS issue marks the third anniversary of the establishment of this department—The Managers' Round Table.

Three years ago when this department was founded in Motion Picture News, under the editorship of Mr. William A. Johnston, it was immediately hailed as one of the most definitely constructive and serviceable efforts which had yet been put forth in behalf of theatre managers.

When the consolidation of Exhibitors Herald-World and Motion Picture News was effected January 1, 1931, this department stood high in the list of those services to the theatre field which were not only to be carried on but strengthened and augmented in every feasible way. The obvious reason for this was because the department was fulfilling, effectively and comprehensively, a pressing and vitally important requirement of theatre managers.

Mr. Charles E. Lewis, since the establishment of this department, has been its editor and presiding officer. On this third anniversary occasion it is a befitting moment to congratulate Mr. Lewis upon the admirable success of the effort. Joining with us in this word of congratulation to Mr. Lewis, we are sure, are the voices of the thousands of managers throughout this country and abroad who have declared that this department has been a practical aid to them in the conduct of their business as well as generally being a source of unvarying interest and inspiration.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is proud of the service it is rendering to the theatre field through the Managers' Round Table. These various matters with which the department is concerned—theatre management, advertising, publicity and exploitation — are those elements which if properly administered mean success to the motion picture business. Failure in these essential activities would mean failure of the business because these are the direct and practical means which render healthful the box office—the collecting agent for all of the industry's income.

The Managers' Round Table has been and will continue to be an open forum for theatremen. MOTION PICTURE HERALD wishes them to know that this activity is conducted not only primarily but solely for their benefit. No objective is sought other than to make this service genuinely interesting and genuinely helpful to them in the conduct of their business. Theatremen are, therefore, urged not to look upon this department as an alien service or as anything remote from their immediate interests. Rather should they look upon it as their own cooperative service carried on week by week for their common benefit. The Managers' Round Table not only aims to serve but does serve—and will continue to serve, conscientiously and industriously.

These remarks on the third anniversary of the Managers' Round Table would be lacking in a necessary and appropriate reference if note were not made and thanks offered for the uniformly splendid and enthusiastic support which managers throughout this country and abroad have given to it.

We bespeak a continuance of this support, meanwhile offering hearty assurances that every possible effort shall be bent toward promoting and advancing this department so that the progress thus far made shall be a stepping-stone toward an increasingly better service for theatremen.

ROUND TABLE RESPONSIBLE FOR INCREASED MERCHANDISING ACTIVITY

By "CHICK" LEWIS

SOME INTERESTING SLANTS ON THE CLUB'S "DOINGS"!

"Peek" into the machinery that has grown from a little cog into a gigantic organization embracing a membership of over 3400 showmen, 10,000 interested readers and encouraging show-merchandising and theatre operation on a scale never before attempted in the history of the industry.

When we tell you that close to a thousand letters a week reach your chairman's desk you can begin to understand what the Managers' Round Table Club of Motion Picture Herald means to the theatre men of today.

WITH all possible modesty we can truthfully say that the Managers' Round Table Club of Motion Picture Herald has done more towards encouraging merchandising throughout the entire industry than any other medium ever advanced.

And the same goes for improving theatre operation and its hundred and one incidental sidelights.

Merchandising, or exploitation if you will, was one phase of a manager's activities that was so matter-of-fact that few ever gave it the serious consideration it deserved.

Theatre operators, both chain and independent, are now greatly concerned over this picture-selling medium because they recognize the necessity of it; not alone from the standpoint of increasing business for the individual pictures being exploited, but because of the attention it directs towards the theatre in general.

Press books were about the only accepted medium for the stimulation of exploitation prior to the Round Table Club. And they were slightly augmented by certain activity for specific pictures according to the producers' and distributors' opinions about so-called outstanding productions.

Perhaps the most gratifying thing about the success of the Round Table Club is not just in the stories published about the members and what they are doing to sell their pictures to the public, but the spirit in which they have entered into the desire to let their brother managers know what they are doing and to learn how others are handling this important part of any showman's job.

We Get Started

Just about three years ago your chairman, then engaged in handling a string of houses in New England, thought it would be a good idea if showmen the world over would create a clearing house for ideas, for suggestions in practical theatre operation and for cultivating friendships that isolation makes so desirable. They found these things in the Club until today we have an organization of almost thirty-five hundred showmen engaged in practically every branch of show business, all actively interested in "their" own organization. Probably the first time in the history of the business that they ever had an organization of their own.

The support of the publication was a most important factor in the growth of the Club because it was through this particular medium that the various members' activities were to be broadcast. It was on these pages that they could read, each and every week, about showmen and their problems. And that support was forthcoming, originally under the banner of Motion Picture News and now under the far-reaching influence of Motion Picture Herald.

It is not our intention to make a statement that no other trade paper gave exploitation any attention or space. On the contrary, they gave it plenty. But it never really amounted to anything because the chief source of their merchandising news was the material sent out from the publicity departments of the various distributors, etc. The personal contact, if we may use that expression, was lacking. If a manager found anything about himself in one of the trade papers it was generally a press agent's conception of what happened and in most cases rarely credited the man who engineered the idea and brought it to a successful conclusion.

That "personal contact" is the thing that turned the trick for the Round Table Club. Managers did not have to feel any longer that their material was "perhaps" going to be used if they took the trouble to send it in. They KNEW it was going to be received with open arms, to be prepared properly for publication and that they would receive the credit they deserved for their efforts.

Another angle which has met with favor among the members and followers of these Club pages is the way all story material is handled. Instead of printing the contributor's letter exactly as received, each and every item is written up in what we have termed "showmen's language"; an easy, readable style. This, too, was liked by the members because it enabled them to get the facts of another member's activities without reading several hundred words really not meant for publication when written.

And on this angle alone we were told, those three years ago, that the idea would never get over because the boys who wrote in their stories would object to seeing them appear in print in any other form than the way they were written. Yet we have NEVER had a kick-back on this angle in all the three years of our existence. So we feel safe in saying that we have hit on the method of handling stories that pleases the entire membership of the Club.

Feature Stories

Special story material, from time to time, and according to its value, would be treated as outstanding stories. This referred to such activities as Fashion Shows, Anniversary Celebrations, Summer Business Builders, or any other timely topic. Thereby not only emphasizing the particular angle, but showing what to do and how to do it.

The style in which all stories are handled shows how fair the members are treated. Every story is set in the same style and type size and does away with any thought that certain members or contributors get better "breaks" than others. On these pages we are all equal, regardless of whether you are handling a five hundred-seat movie or a five thousand-seat palace. The only difference is the size of the story and that is entirely gauged by the material submitted and also whether they include photos or printed matter to be made into cuts. Barring these two slants the same attention is given to each and every letter received.

Timely Topics

At various times we try to build up added interest in the Club and the Club pages by starting some interesting discussion about some angle which may be occupying the limelight for the moment. In this respect we have run series dealing with "What Is Exploitation," "Your Problems And Mine," "Personal Publicity," etc., all made up from information secured from the members themselves. Just as everything else on these pages.

As a medium for intercommunication between members and showmen the world over we can think of nothing to compare with it. Not only through these pages, but by direct mail between members, thousands of showmen have started friendships which will last as long as many of them live. The basis for such correspondence may be the exception one member takes to what another member has to say about some particular kind of merchandising. Or again, they may find that they once knew or worked with a showman whose activities appear on our pages. What does it matter how it starts? The point is that they find new friends.

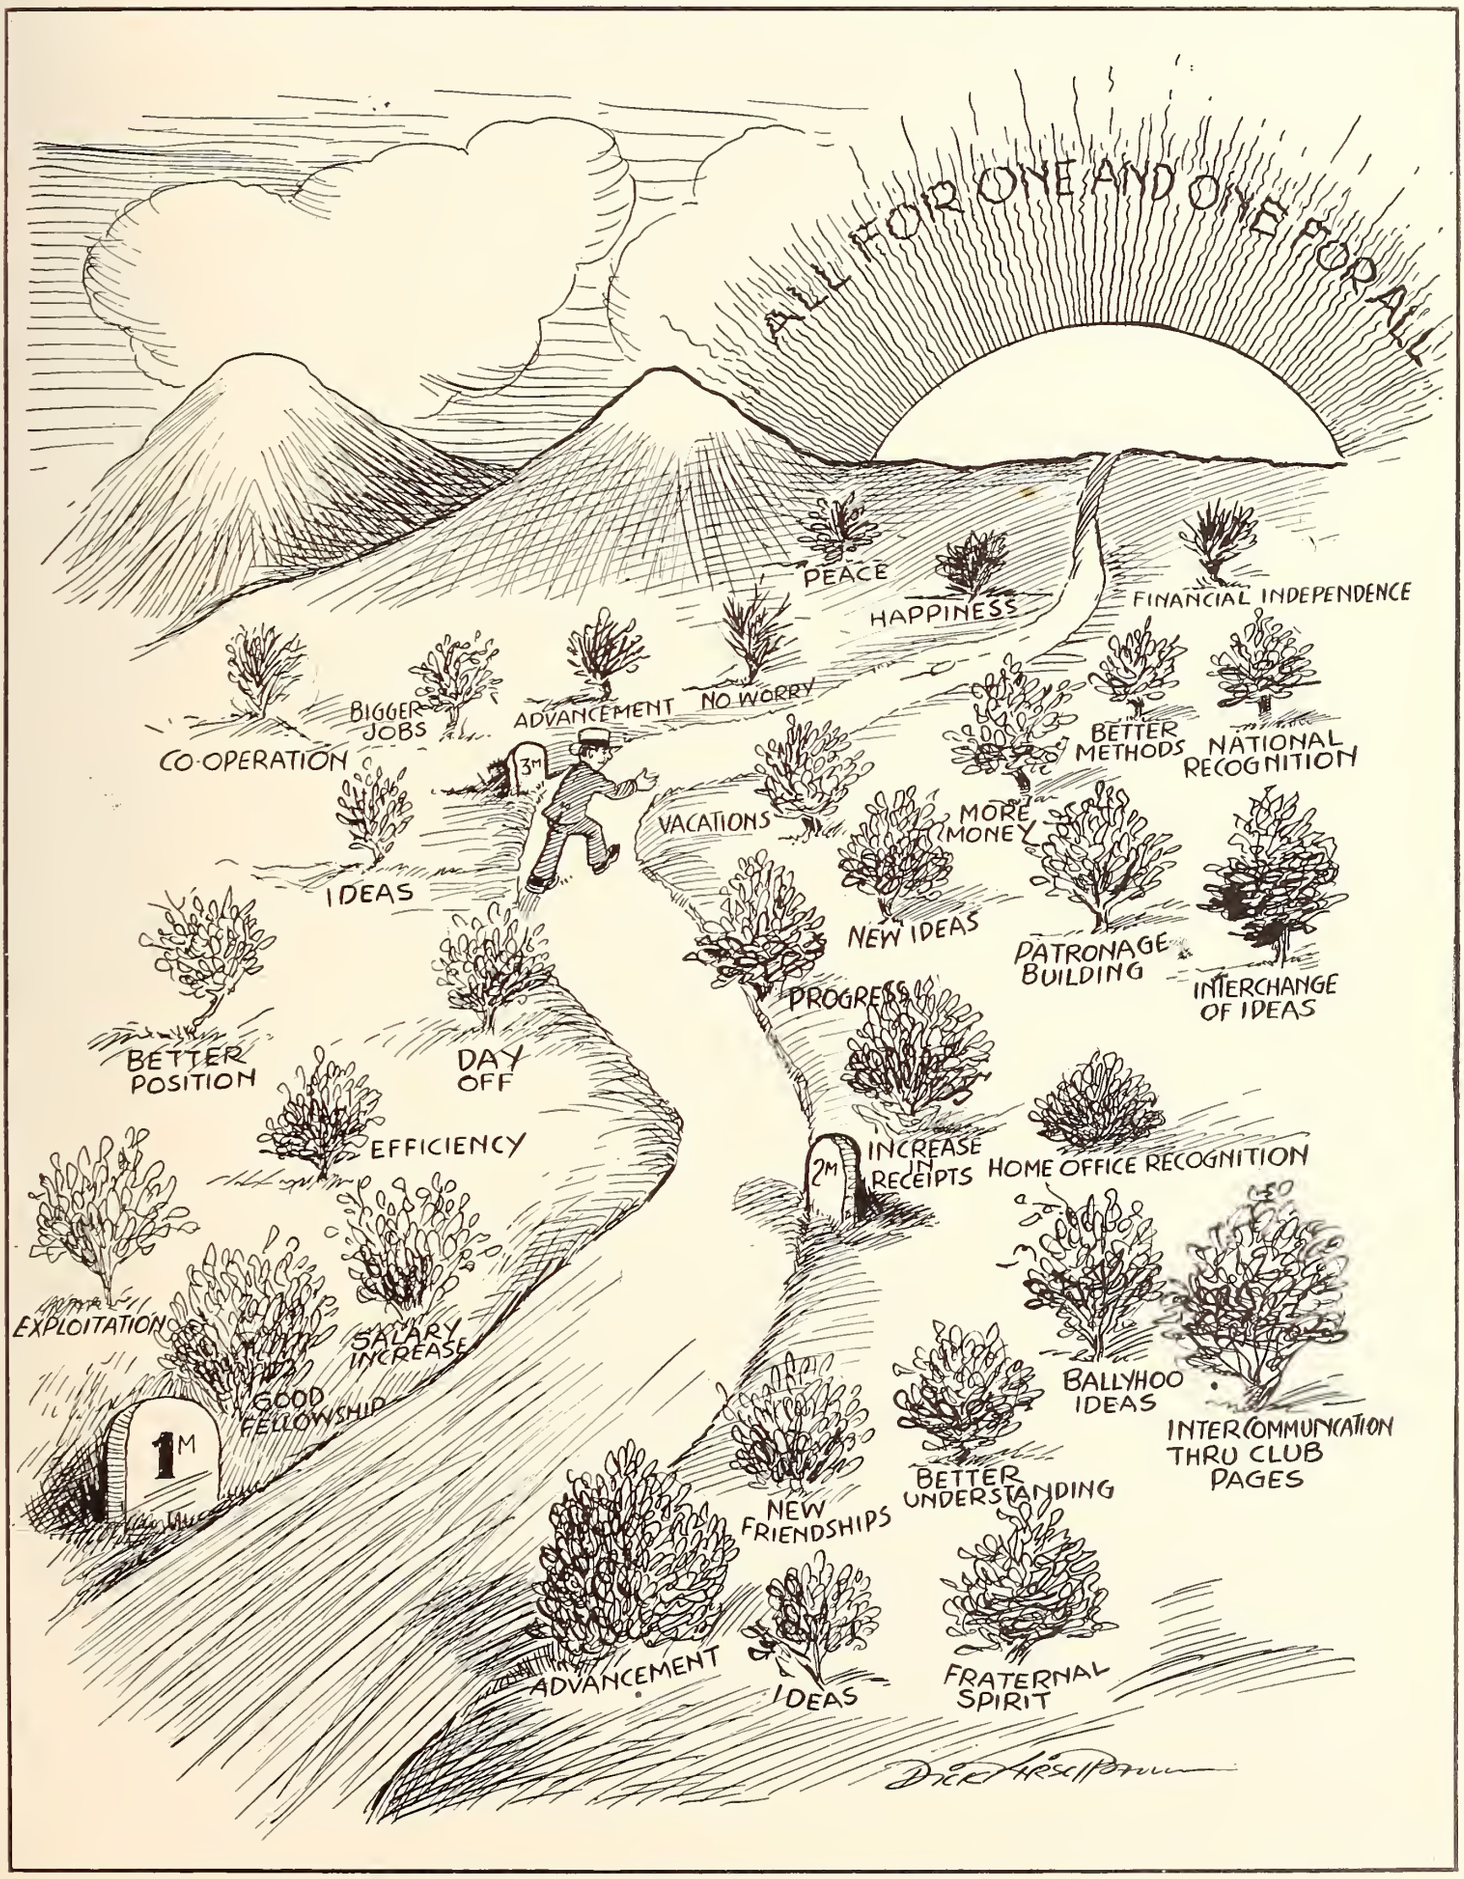
TAKE A PEEK AT WHAT'S GOING ON IN CLUB HEADQUARTERS

We Win a Hat!

It was amusing during the first year of the Club's existence to note the "knowing" smiles when we made reference to the amount of mail handled at Club headquarters from our members. Not being exactly schooled in the business of trade paper work, we never for a moment thought that our statement was being doubted until one gentleman connected with another trade paper actually inquired whether we weren't stretching our imagination too far. He then went on to tell us that he was in "this" business for some fifteen years and knew that it was next to impossible to get the managers to write letters consistently to any trade paper.

We won a perfectly good spring hat before the end of that day, and far be it from us to say that we are gamblers—not much. But what tickled us most was the genuine surprise on that man's face when he sat at our desk and looked over the accumulated mail for about three days. The amount of mail was not the only thing which made him sit up and take notice. The friendly wording used in the majority of those letters is what made him turn an about-face and offer his apologies.

When physically possible each and every letter is carefully read and acknowledged personally. The only deviation from this rule is when we are rushed for a short time and do not want to hold up publication until we can answer our mail. Then we "shoot" it through for early use and answer it after the story has been prepared and sent to press. Important matters are naturally given prompt attention. And take our word for it, more than fifty per-cent of the mail concerns personal matters and not exploitation material. So you can judge for yourself whether this department can be classed as mechanical. No, indeed, it's a personal matter between each member and your chairman.



We are afraid that what we started out to make into a brief summary, about the Club and what it is doing, has now reached the proportions of a "confession," so we'll cut it short with the heartfelt appreciation of your chairman for the fine support the members have accorded him and look forward to greater accomplishments during the next years of the Club's existence.

Here's hoping that the spirit of "All For One And One For All" will take on even greater importance in the future than in the past and that all our members will find the Club and the Club pages a source of interest and pleasure. We are always ready to be of service, regardless of what the request may be, so do not hesitate to call on us any time at all.

To each and every member who has cooperated in the past, we take this means of expressing our sincere appreciation, and we are sure that we can count on them in the future as well. Thanks, boys, and here's looking ahead to better days for all of us in this business of running theatres.

THE THIRD MILESTONE!

Some Executive Comment

"The MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB is the best medium that I know of that gives many managers an opportunity for exchange of thought.

"Let me congratulate you on your Third Anniversary and trust that the future will carry the same measure of success that you have had in the past.

"With every good wish, I am sincerely,"

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, President, Hughes-Franklin Theatres.

"The MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB of MOTION PICTURE HERALD is surely the outstanding editorial feature of the trade paper field. Constructive efforts can always best be put into effect through suggestions gleaned from an exchange of ideas.

"There is no showman in the country who cannot learn by following the activities of others and truly there is no department comparable for this purpose with the 'ROUND TABLE.'

EDDY ECCLES,
Fox West Coast Theatres.

"Having been a constant reader of your MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB ever since its inception, I would like to state at this time, that in my opinion its columns have always contained very helpful ideas and suggestions.

"On numerous occasions, I have urged the managers in my division to become members of your 'Club,' so that they may avail themselves of the opportunity to learn the various publicity ideas, tie-ups, etc., that managers all over the country are using.

"As you know, recently, the managers of all Fox Theatres have become subscribers to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and I am quite sure that in time all managers will appreciate the value of being a member of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB."

SAM RINZLER,
Fox Brooklyn Theatres.

"May I express my opinion that the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB is a very desirable thing for the promotion of amusement interests."

NICHOLAS M. SCHENCK,
President, Loew's, Inc.

"The MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD is to my mind a most useful institution.

"It serves as a clearing house to which managers may profitably apply for suggestions. The idea is in complete accord with our own notions of theatre operation—letting the manager run his theatre as though it were his own business."

HARRY ARTHUR,
Fox Theatres Corp.

"Your MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE department is, without doubt, a valuable feature for the alert, ambitious theatre manager. I know a large number of our managers read it religiously. A breezy sensible exchange of selling ideas cannot fail to benefit us all. The youngsters in the business are stimulated by it and the old-timers are reminded of the things that they had forgotten, but which are still good boxoffice.

OSCAR A. DOOB,
Director Advertising-Publicity, Loew's Theatres, Inc.

"It is my belief that through the medium of this department of your publication, managers of theatres in all parts of the country are served from week to week with a wealth of data, stunts and ideas that can not help but be of direct benefit in the more efficient and therefore more profitable operation of theatres.

"I feel confident that every man in the Ohio territory is keenly interested in the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB, and each reader finds in its contents a real incentive to the accomplishment of greater things."

C. J. LATTA,
Warner Bro. Theatres, Cleveland, Ohio

"I have just issued instructions that will go out in the next issue of our western edition of 'The Last Word' that every manager should subscribe to the ROUND TABLE CLUB because we think that the information contained therein will be most helpful to them."

OSCAR OLDKNOW,
Vice-President, Fox Theatres.

"In my humble opinion the weekly arrival of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD at a manager's office should be something of an event.

"Show business now being primarily a matter of knowledge and news no manager can afford to miss any opportunity to gather these unto himself. The manager who keeps himself abreast of the business is always the one who forges to the top.

"There is no better source for knowledge and news of the business than the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Its arrival each week provides the manager with additional equipment for the better handling of his job. That is why I believe that its weekly delivery should be something of an event. The publication, in my opinion, is something that no manager can afford to neglect. I read every issue from cover to cover and never without profit."

G. S. YORKE,
Director Publicity and Advertising, Fox Theatre Corporation.

"In the opinion of the writer, the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB appearing in each issue of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD is a most commendable institution.

"I am always very pleased to note in your columns the activities of the managers in the Fox Buffalo and Albany Divisions. I am, in turn, advising our managers that contributions to your magazine have my hearty endorsement."

MARSHALL TAYLOR,
Fox Upstate Theatres, N. Y.

Tom McGuire Says Not Much Doing But We'll Say He's Busy

That the business of selling shows in his city is progressing at a rapid rate is indicated in an Anniversary issue letter from Thomas McGuire, manager of the Hollywood Theatre, Detroit, in spite of the fact that the writer rather apologetically informs the Club that there's nothing much to offer in the way of news. After a glance through this member's contribution we'd go so far as to say that he is making things hum out his way.

For instance, right at the start Tom informs us the Hollywood just gave away its 125th Ford (one is given away each Friday and Saturday). Business must be tough, Tom, if you can give away two automobiles each week. But what is the gag? You don't furnish any detail so all we can tell your brother members is that you've apparently turned Santa Claus. Oke?

But one thing that Tom does mention is that his house is running a Kid Klub Kontest of a nature that is getting a lot of attention each Saturday matinee. Any youngster under 16 who has any theatrical talent may compete for awards of wrist watches and other suitable prizes. Now here's the trick: The winners of these prizes, after a period of 15 weeks, compete among themselves for Trophy Cups; then the cup winners compete in a grand finale, the grand prize being an engagement along with the regular RKO headliners on the vaudeville program. Tom tells us the kids and their fond parents just ate this up, and that it cost but little owing to the fact that a jeweler gave him a break for a co-operative ad.

A Diplomatic Move

During the Easter season Tommy got himself in the good graces of the religiously inclined by turning over the house for a portion of Good Friday to the Detroit Council of Churches. A special program was made up for the occasion which called attention to the fact that services would be held at the theatre from 12 to 3 P. M. The organist was featured and choruses from several congregations took part in the affair. The regular theatre program was started at 3:15 P. M. Two pages of advertising were secured for the program. As to the popularity of the move, 3,442 people attended during the aforementioned hours.

Mac also has a calling card gag which he tells us has proven a corking business puller. He's passing it along in view of the fact that it may be a novelty to some of the boys. Just one thing wrong with this picture. Tom. You write that the card is enclosed but we can't locate same, so will have to describe it as well as possible. According to his letter the card serves the same purpose that any regular business calling card serves, plus the novelty of appearing as a reserved seat for some theatre special. And it really does admit one to the theatre. But, as Tommy points out, how often does just one person go to a theatre alone? Therefore, the recipient brings along another cash customer which 10 to 1 the house would have had otherwise. He adds that a great number of them are apparently retained as souvenirs as fully 80 per cent never are returned.

Newscasting Is Popular

Another new stunt that the Hollywood started a few weeks ago which has proven quite a novelty is opening a half hour earlier three nights a week to permit the newscasting of late press flashes, closing stock quotations baseball scores, race results, etc. The news flashes are furnished through the courtesy of the daily papers and are those which have arrived too late for insertion in the editions generally carried home. In order that the stunt does not become too tiresome, local celebrities and public officials are invited to do the news casting. This stunt is handled on nights that are not continuous run.

No. Tom, from what you tell us we gather that you are no busier than the one-armed paper hanger but now that you've been elected President of the business men's association on your side of the town perhaps you will manage to keep your mind occupied. We have just sent that snap of you and boss Ben Cohen down to the engraver so it ought to make its appearance with this story. We hope that Ben will find something for you to do this summer in the way of selling shows and that you will continue to serve your fellow members. Thanks Tommy, very much, for sending the nice letter. The Club appreciates your efforts.

LOCAL APPEAL AND CIVIC CONTACTS!

By NAT HOLT

City Manager, Fox Theatres
Wichita, Kansas

WHEN a man manages two or three million dollars worth of property in a town of a hundred thousand population, is the head of an organization of a hundred or so employees, with a payroll running over $20,000 a year—employees who are in weekly contact with between thirty and fifty per cent of the total population of the city—that man needs must be a public figure in his city.

Such places fall to the lot of very few men in the ordinary American city of the size mentioned. There are, of course, the city officials themselves, the heads of the public service companies, and, last but not least, the manager of a group of circuit theatres.

This latter individual is—or should be—as important as the former ones named, for what organization or factor in community life is more at the constant service of the public than the motion picture theatre? Truly, it has become a part of our daily life, and it ministers to a need that is taken care of, in mass numbers, but no other means—the need for relaxation and entertainment at a price everyone can afford.

I did not realize the multiplicity of public demands that can be made upon a theatre manager in such a location, or the necessity for civic contacts to maintain such a position properly until I came to Wichita, Kansas, a year ago, from San Francisco.

I had managed one theatre in Frisco, a big one, but my field was necessarily restricted. In Wichita I had four on my hands, four large down town houses and one suburban house in a high class residential district.

In Frisco, while I had a wide acquaintance, it was largely among the newspaper boys, the men in my own business, the police and city hall bunch—the sort of friendships which can do a theatre man the most good in a big town.

In Wichita I soon found that citizens belonging to this group played a very small part in the life of the community; that the large majority of the populaiton took its cue of conduct from the churches, the civic clubs, the retail merchants association and the business leaders associated with the chamber of commerce. Even politics, under a city manager form of government, was not a matter of party alignment, but largely denominational feeling.

One of Holt's Attractive Lobby Display Pieces

I don't suppose I would have realized this sectional differences so quickly if I hadn't been drawn into the vortex of a Sunday theatre fight within a month after I hit Wichita.

Now, I had always regarded a theatre on Sunday the same as I had looked at it on Tuesday—except that Sunday was the day when you had the biggest crowds.

In Wichita it was brought home to me with a wallop that to open a theatre on Sunday was not only morally wrong, desecrated the Sabbath and led the youth of the town into all sorts of licentious practices—but violated an ancient state law—adopted in 1867—as well. Our battle was to remove a city ordinance which prohibited Sunday opening, since this antiquated state law was only a labor statute, never invoked against anything but theatres.

Pointing out the unfairness of such discriminatory interpretation of the law, we directed our campaign along the line of fairness and personal liberty, and by newspaper advertising, personal electioneering, radio speeches, and every sort of publicity we could employ, we convinced a majority of the population that they shouldn't let a hypocritical minority tell them how they should spend their leisure time.

The campaign was a wonderful experience for me, and I profited by what I had learned. I saw the necessity for establishing and maintaining the right sort of civic contacts, realizing that any animosities which remained after such a spirited battle would have to be remedied by myself, as head of the theatre group which was popularly supposed to have inspired and carried on the fight. Carefully I laid my plans. I made it a point to meet the pastors of the important churches, convince them that I was not their competitor, offered the facilities of the theatres to help them in any of their church enterprises. I became a member of the Rotary Club, the Chamber of Commerce; helped the retailers in several of their civic schemes and soon was made a director of the Retail Merchants Association. I was elected to membership on the Red Cross board and made chairman of publicity. I gave free shows for various charitable purposes, aided the Community Chest in its annual campaign, used the theatre screens in the Red Cross relief drives, the Christmas Seal fund. All this activity brought much publicity of a commendatory nature, and within a short time many who had opposed us on the Sunday issue discovered that I wasn't such a bad fellow after all, and really had spirit that could be directed along lines of public service as well as lines that led only to the box office.

The natural result, of course, was that one line did lead to the other. Our business has shown a healthy growth during the year I have been in Wichita, and I know that public service has had its share in this increase as well as showmanship.

All other things aside, showmanship is, of course, the most important factor in a theatremans' success. After all, except for some differences in temperament due to geography, people are pretty much the same the world over. And they will succumb to the same methods of showmanship in one spot that will fall for in another. Good programs, properly advertised, and properly presented in clean, attractive, comfortable theatres, will bring in the customers.

To keep them coming, their confidence must never be abused. Keep your advertising clean. It can be clean and still be effective. Dress up your lobbies, and change the fixed decorations before they become shoddy. Vary your poster style, so that every production won't look alike to the passerby. Use your marquee for something else than just a roof to keep the rain off the sidewalk. Don't over-exploit a poor program simply to show a profit for that one week. Over-exploitation is liable to place you in the position of the boy who cried "wolf!" once too often. When everything is dramatic, nothing is dramatic.

Urge upon cashiers, doormen and ushers that so far as the public is concerned they are the Blank Theatre. Sugar draws more flies than vinegar, and the cashier's smiling "How many, please?" the doorman's polite salute and the usher's solicitous attention are remembered long after a poor picture is forgotten. The patron will never see that picture again, but he'll meet those same employees time after time.

All these things are the things that every showman knows, but it doesn't come amiss to have them recalled to his attention now and then.

And if he persists in their practice, makes and keeps himself favorably known in his community, lets nothing in his personal conduct ever reflect on his business, he can't help but succeed.

Nat Holt is the City Manager for the Fox Theatres in Wichita, Kansas, and we are paying no idle compliment when we say that he ranks with the foremost theatre managers in the country. Mr. Holt is NOT a story-writer, that's why his article may never win a prize, but he IS a showman and therefore knows what he is talking about.

Nat Holt did not seek us out, on the contrary, we sought him and kept on his trail until he finally consented to tell us a little about the fine work being accomplished at the theatres under his direction. What he has to say in this story is straight-from-the-shoulder and should be mighty interesting to every showman who is a showman.

We are grateful to him for this courtesy and hope that his interesting activities continue to be a feature of our Club pages.

F. O. NANCE OF THE HALL INDUSTRIES CHAIN FINDS CLUB VALUABLE

"CONCERNING the value to showmen of the 'Round Table Club'":

This would be very hard to cover in a few words, as there are so many different uses and helps covered by its contents that I could write pages and pages telling you why I find it a valuable aid. First of all, the information contained in its pages is alive, and being written by showmen, for showmen, is practical for localities ranging from the smallest city to the largest. It contains only successful stunts and exploitation helps, and the department pages are not filled with the impractical, or ideas whose cost would make them prohibitive for the average town.

There is an exceptional amount of interest being shown in its club pages each week, a glowing tribute in itself to the actual management of the department, and I am sure that other showmen will agree with me that this organization, conducted as it is being done, contains information and ideas that money can not buy, and affords each member an opportunity to pass along to a brother showman his own opinions and exploitation ideas, those that have been profitable to him.

And so on the eve of the third anniversary edition of the Managers' Round Table Club, may I be among the first to extend to you as chairman my heartiest congratulations, and to pledge you my cooperation in the future toward the betterment and increasing interest in this, the livest organization in the show business."

ROUND TABLE PAGES A TEXTBOOK!

Says Dick Moss, Orange, California

"TELLING why the Managers' Round Table Club is an aid to theatre managers, is like trying to explain why a baby needs its mother. It's necessary—that's all. In this rapidly changing business, with the horizon attaining a different aspect almost daily, with showmanship constantly assuming new proportions—there must be somethink to keep the theatre man posted, to tell him what is changing and how he best can meet approaching conditions. Every theatre situation requires different handling—what is good showmanship in Tucson, Arizona, would be rediculous in Los Angeles. A stunt that would go over like a million dollars at the Chinese in Hollywood, would die a natural death in Paterson, New Jersey. How is a managers going to keep posted on these things? Today he is up in the wilds of Oregon, tomorrow his organization decides to send him to the balmy south. A manager must have some information; he must have a text book that can be referred to, that can be studied, that can be observed and used to advantage in whatever predicament he may find himself. No matter what the business is, there is nothing that will take the place of concentrated study. You can't go to college to learn to be a theatre manager—how is a man going to study this business. While he is spending years managing a 600 seater in a tank town, how is he going to know of the methods necessary in running a de-luxer in a key spot.

The Manager's Round Table Club has anticipated these needs of the theatre manager, and in forming an exchange for showmanship, has evolved a beneficial adjunct for theatre management. Not satisfied with the few pages it started with, the Club grew weekly, until it is now considered the outstanding section of the HERALD.

Congratulations to the Manager's Round Table Club for its splendid growth; congratulations to the many managers who avail themselves of this service; congratulations to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD for recognizing an idea and giving it the proper treatment and encouragement without which it would have been difficult to achieve its present high standing in the industry."

THE VALUE OF KIDDIE BUSINESS!

By NATALIE TOLMAN

"Big Sister" and Director Kiddie Club
State Theatre, Stoughton, Mass

KIDDIE business, that valuable and intangible advertising medium, which left us with the coming of the sophisticated talking versions of Broadway plays and books is returning by leaps and bounds all over the country. Perhaps it is the prevailing crop of westerns, gangster stories, serials, cartoons or the current crop of features with child stars that is enticing the thin dimes to the box office. Or perhaps it is the increasing realization of its importance by the country's showmen which prompted them to organize the multitude of children's activities now in vogue. Whatever the source, it is important and beneficial that juvenile interest in picture programs is again on the rise and reflecting itself at the box office.

Kiddies an Asset

Theatres that enjoy a healthy kiddie business have an asset of immeasurable value. Lucrative in itself, it is further capitalized on through increased adult enthusiasm and again as a publicity possibility of no small importance, especially to those showmen operating one of the various types of Kiddie Clubs. Year in and year out new youngsters are reaching the age when they can be interested in theatre programs and Saturday afternoon shows. They cannot be contacted or enthused through newspaper advertising or other ordinary channels and must be reached through special means or through other children. The supply is endless, the possibilities unlimited and as the youngsters grow up real boosters for the theatre because of special attention paid to their entertainment they become adult admissions and solid friends. Any institution built on such a strong foundation cannot help being successful.

Wherever practical, and this includes almost every type of house with the exception of downtown metropolitan first-runs, an extensive effort to cater to children in any way will pay good dividends. And even the deluxers now have such added features as free dancing classes and special children's attractions to interest and attract the youngsters who go a long way toward bringing the adults to a particular theatre of their choice. Excluding several types of grind houses whose capacity and policy does not permit a play for the Kiddies and their low admission prices, any showman who passes up the possibilities of an extensive child interest in his theatre cannot get the most out of it. There are many mediums, all practical and not too costly; special morning matinees, gift or souvenir performances, school tie-ups and contests, baseball leagues, drum corps and military units, Scout tie-ups and perhaps the most popular and effective the Kiddie Clubs of all types. This last mentioned is undoubtedly the best because of its flexibility, wide scope of interest and negligible cost of operation. Whatever the medium, every manager should adopt some plan, build it up and carry it along, for the returns are well worth the effort. Once started, it is surprising the ease with which this type of exploitation may be accomplished.

Good All Year 'Round

The Kiddie Club idea in its numerous forms is adaptable to all-year-around use and may be conducted on as large or as small scale as desired or required. Its use is now general with circuits for exploitation of cartoons or serials for 10 or 12-weeks periods, carrying its interest right into the homes to children and adults alike. Unlike some other children's feature, the Kiddie Club is not seasonable and, once started, maintains steady growth and widespread interest which is not only evident at the special week-end matinees, but is brought into the schools, churches, libraries and other places where children gather. It helps to keep the theatre name continually before the people via the press and word-of-mouth comment and if properly conducted and exploited soon becomes a local institution of no small consequence. Right here comes the difficulty to be avoided in its operation and that is a slowing up of effort and activity after a few weeks followed by an inevitable lessening of interest in the club. Like everything in successful show business, managerial ingenuity must be brought in to inject new features in the Club proceedings weekly, as youngsters will tire of sameness just as others do. It is this newness and originality that develops the growth of the idea and creates the desired interest and publicity. It is this lack of novelty that has meant the passing of many Clubs after a few weeks of life and before the original cost really began to show monetary returns. Further to be avoided is too great an expenditure in proportion to the results that are possible. Growth of this activity is fast and there is always the possibility of building it up to too great an extent for the capacity, size of community or point where it ceases to be profitable. Details of the starting and operation of Kiddie Clubs have been frequently published in these columns. Once started and given whole-hearted effort and attention from those in charge, its growth will be something any manager may point to with pride.

Benefits to be derived from this special attention to children, no matter what form it takes, may be classified as threefold: actual box office returns, both from children and adults, added good-will for the theatre from numerous sources, and publicity, there being no better medium than kiddies' or through children's activities. Through the Kiddie Club, not only is it possible to stage a lucrative Saturday morning or afternoon show at small cost, but subsequent adult business at night is increased. Further along this line, if the current program happens to be weak in juvenile interest the Kiddie Club may be expected to maintain the gross at its usual peak. From an angle of goodwill the theatre is brought closer to the schools, civic organizations, churches and the merchants through its Kiddie Club. These folks are made to appreciate that in attending the theatre their children are receiving special attention and that the theatre's ambition is not wholly the almighty dollar. Schools and libraries are easier to contact or tie-up on promotions during the week on other than Club ideas and merchants are made to realize that the theatre has a valuable power for them in an organized group of several thousand youngsters, whose parents or themselves are all prospective buyers. We have found here in the conduct of our State Theatre Kiddies' Club a liberal willingness on the part of local stores and manufacturers to co-operate with us in any way we suggest where the kiddies are concerned, so much so that at the present time we have connections with manufacturers and wholesalers that almost completely defray the expenses of operating the Club as well as keeping us supplied with candy, gifts, prizes and ice cream given away as part of the contests, games and stage shows put on every Saturday afternoon.

Natalie Tolman is well qualified to discuss the subject of Kiddie Business and its value to the theatres. She has been actively engaged in handling one of the largest theatre kiddie clubs in the country and an organization which has attracted attention throughout New England and the east.

Miss Natalie Tolman

In response to our request she has made a special effort to tackle this problem in a general way rather than just sticking to her own experiences; therefore other theatres ought to find this article of great value.

Those who follow the Club pages will readily recall some of her fine work which was described in this section in the past. Further material on the subject of Kiddies and the Theatre will be published from time to time from Miss Tolman.

They're Good Pluggers

From an advertising or publicity standpoint the benefits are immediately apparent. Through the children the theatre name and Club interest is carried into all surrounding communities and any youngsters' activities are always good newspaper copy, with the theatre falling in for the plug. It just can't be helped, as a couple of thousand kids mean plenty of readers and the boys at the desks know it even to the extent of using pictures. This goes for the cities as well as the towns. Not only is a real live Kiddie Club of benefit as a Saturday attraction, but the list may easily be capitalized on to put over mid-week playdates through special shows or adult contact via the kids and the local parents-teachers' associations, usually hard-boiled, are just as easily won over.

Further publicity is offered by the radio and appearances before women's clubs and organizations to those houses operating Kiddie Clubs with stage shows and talented youngsters. It is quite possible, as we have done already, to assemble a list of very capable juvenile performers, organize a Kiddie Club orchestra, glee clubs or present short playlets for radio and stage presentation under the direction of some person in charge of Club activities who has been built up through this work into a popular local personality.

Still Going Strong

This type of activity is not as difficult or involved as it may appear at first, since it naturally develops with the growth of the Kiddie Club. There can be no doubt as to the value of special children's features in connection with theatre operation, for it is based on the promotion of kiddies, an inherent part of everything and our adults of tomorrow. Manager's should develop something along this line and give it just as much serious thought as other operating problems. For those who might not be personally qualified to carry out a Kiddies plan, it is not difficult to secure the services of some one with enough training and personality to make it a genuine success, and by working all of the angles which present themselves the cost may easily be kept down to a point of showing a good profit. Among the long list of things which may be done to encourage the kiddie business we have dwelt mostly on the Kiddie Club idea for the reasons explained above, which are based on observations and actual facts in connection with the operation of our own State Theatre Kiddies Club, in existence now nearly 18 months and still going strong.

MR. THEATRE MANAGER, GIVE YOURSELF THE DOUBLE-CHECK!

Says

LARRY WOODIN
Wellsboro, Pa.

MR. Theatre-Manager, you are always analyzing your business. Have you ever analyzed yourself? Given yourself a good double-check as far as your job is concerned? Given yourself the once-over? Some of you who have been using red ink for the past year might find the way to black ink and a profit for the business if you will stop and analyze yourself as far as your job is concerned. You may find the whole trouble with your business is you, and not your business.

Mr. Theatre-Manager, you are an executive of one of the biggest businesses in the world. Why not take time right now to take inventory of yourself on the job? Put yourself on the spot for the moment and see if you can come out of it. Here's the formula. It's a stiff one and if you can honestly find yourself among the proper type of manager in regard to each of the questions, then the trouble is in the business and not in you.

As a theatre-manager you must have mental equipment as well as sound equipment. It must run as smothly as your sound equipment. Does yours? Here are a few questions that will help you to find out? How are you at figuring out a plan? Are you excellent or scatter-brained? Do you draw sound or pathetic conclusions? Can you decide in a hurry what to do and do you stick to your decision? How is your imagination? Can you do the same old thing in a new way? Can you see what is ahead in your business? What is your attitude toward changing routines? Are you narrow-minded? How long does it take you to get your business running smoothly under changed conditions? Do you have pet ideas? Does anyone have to tell you always what to do? Can your firm rely upon you to act wisely?

What Kind of a Boss?

Now, Mr. Theatre-Manager, just where do you stand as the boss? Are you always able to tell your employees clearly and concisely just what is expected of them? Do you sell the idea of cooperation to all of your employees? Do you ever antagonize them? Do you know a good employee when you see one? Are you the "big cheese" or do you make your employees all feel that they have some responsibility? Have you ever consulted your employees on anything or do you place yourself on a pedestal? After answering those questions you may find yourself one h—— of a boss.

Now give your personality the once-over. How do you stand up under opposing judgment on the part of your superiors? What is your attitude toward your employees' ideas? Are you able to realize the probable reaction to your own personal actions? Before you make a move do you look ahead and see just how that move will affect business?

The last question that concerns your mental equipment is to me one of great importance. Here it is. How do you act under the stress of emergency or unusual conditions? Do you ever go up in the air? If you do your business probably goes with you.

Now for a few more that can be answered more quickly but are nevertheless just as important in this examination of yourself on the job.

Do you learn the new methods and ideas of the business? How long does it take you to do your work? Is your job done as well as other managers you know? Do you stick to the job day in and day out? Do you go ahead without being told every detail? How do you get along with your employees? Do you know your job? Can the company always depend on you? How successful are you in directing your employees? If you were somebody else what would be your opinion as to just how you measure up to what is expected of you, taking into consideration all the questions asked above?

Do you belong to the Managers' Round Table Club? If not, you are missing the best opportunity afforded you to rub elbows with theatre managers the world over. You are missing an opportunity to really see where you stand when you see what the other fellow is doing. It is the voice of the manager, regardless of his theatre or location. It is his source of information, his means of learning new tricks, the medium by which he can tell the world what he thinks, does and would like to do. The Managers' Round Table Club pages constitute the showman's encyclopedia, which is revised and made up to date with every issue of Motion Picture Herald.

DEPRESSION vs. PROSPERITY!

WHAT IS THE ANSWER, SHOWMEN?

By JACK O'CONNELL
Managing Director
Vita-Temple, Toledo, Ohio

I know that your Managers' Round Table Club Anniversary Number is going to be a huge success. I've read it faithfully since you first started it and I have received genuine inspiration from the enthusiastic contributions of our fellow wide-awake members. Your leadership in this worthwhile movement has been dynamic, your logic sound and the sympathetic interest you have shown in the problems confronting the members has awakened in every one of us a whole-hearted desire to cooperate with you.

With a membership as large and varied as the Managers' Round Table Club it would be hard for anyone to write about a subject relative to our business that has not been written about many times before. Perhaps it would be well if, instead of attempting to find such a subject, or write interestingly about an old one, we reviewed the progress of our industry during the last year and tried to find from the experience some thoughts that will guide us in the future.

An industry growing as fast as ours is bound to make many mistakes—it is bound to suffer with growing pains in its effort to anticipate the demands of its patrons. Most of the mistakes that have been made have been honest ones, therefore let there be no bitterness in our minds as we look back and reckon the consequences. Rather let us put those mistakes beneath us as another stepping stone in our march up the path of progress.

"It's An Ill Wind—"

Nothing brings out the weaknesses of a man or a business like a depression or a reverse. The things that we did wrong in good times and never paid any attention to are glaringly thrown up at us in poor times because of their dire consequences.

In a way the present business depression has been a boon to the motion picture industry and to every individual connected with it. It has taught us the value of the dollar. It has brought home to the producer the utter fallacy of paying exorbitant prices for talent and then shouldering the cost on the exhibitor. It has taught the producer who also operates theatres that he can not keep his seats filled unless he makes the right kind of pictures. Becoming a buyer as well as a seller has made him realize that every picture he makes is not suitable for his own theatres (and therefore not suitable for an independent exhibitor). The depression also has sobered up the producer after his mad theatre-buying spree of a year ago. It has brought him to a sudden realization of a very important fact in this business, important as well in any other business, that competition ceases to be the life of trade when it shuts off the source of supply of the competitor.

The depression has brought out forcibly the weaknesses of long-distance management, or chain operation. It has proved clearly that theatres are operated primarily on impulse and that the good idea of today is a dead letter tomorrow. Reports may be all right but receipts are better. Many a genius in a chain organization has been slaughtered mentally because his idea had to go down many little rivers of investigation and approval before it reached the ocean of achievement.

There Is No Substitute

Bad times have made some of the leaders in our industry forget that we are in the entertainment business and that there is no substitute for that commodity—at least several thousand desperate theatre men have not found any substitute for entertainment so far—and that the coffers of the producers can not be replenished permanently by throwing the screen open to advertising. A shortage in profits is no valid reason for this industry to antagonize the newspapers and magazines which have so generously helped nurse this infant up through the lean years to its golden maturity. The few extra dollars that producers can get from advertisers will never compensate for the loss of public respect. It will not repay them for the resentment of the patron who pays his money at the box office to obtain entertainment and when he gets inside finds they have sold him sugar-coated advertising.

We have had many months of this depression—we have watched its cleansing influence on our business and we have profited, I hope, by the weaknesses that it has brought out.

Looking on the brighter side of the last year, there has been marked improvement in the production of sound pictures from a mechanical standpoint. There seems to be a concerted effort on the part of leading producers to develop a technique that will be suitable for talking picture production and to discard the bastard form of art found in the early talkers for a faster and smoother flowing tempo similar to the motion of the silent picture.

Better Run Theatres

There has been a general improvement in the management of theatres, especially in regard to the matter of accommodating patrons with all modern facilities. The catch-as-catch-can methods of the early store show are being replaced, even in the smallest towns, with de luxe operations.

The art of exploitation also has come in for a general cleaning up during the last year. The raucous blare of the irresponsible exploiteer is being replaced by strict adherence to truth in advertising copy and publicity methods.

Independent theatre owners throughout the land have made strides to combine their buying power and associate with one another to procure better conditions, both from outside the industry and from within.

And most of all, the last year has proved, in spite of the depression and terrific losses, that the men and women in this industry have not lost faith and that they are looking forward with heads held high, confident that this industry, before any other in America, will reap the rewards of a new and greater prosperity.

A SLANT ON GENERAL CONDITIONS!

By EARL T. LEAPER
Managing Director
N. Y. Paramount Theatre

Practically every showman in the country is anxious to get the views of one who manages an "ace" deluxe theatre, therefore, what Earl T. Leaper, manager of the New York Paramount Theatre has to say should be interesting to all of us. Mr. Leaper tackles the present general condition of the industry in a manner that leaves little room to doubt that he knows what he is talking about. Apparently he has made an intense study of present-day problems as they affect the theatre and theatre-operation.

E. T. Leaper

In the near future Mr. Leaper has promised to give us another article dealing specifically with DeLuxe Theatre management, and we can think of no one better qualified to discuss such a subject. His handling of the immense Paramount Theatre places him in a position to know all of the troubles and pitfalls that beset a managing director of a deluxe house.

We are grateful to Mr. Leaper for this article and hope that our many members and readers find it as interesting as we did.

The De Luxe Theatre!

The first child of theatrical superlativism; the most glamorous, colorful and romantic realism of theatrical history; the prodigal daughter of finance returned to suckle the fatted calf; the dung heap and the rainbow's end of stagecraft; the musical panorama of a nation; a whisp of art in the molding hands of commercialism magnified into a towering silhouette across the skyline of the greatest industrial epoch of all human history; the marble portals to our dreamland of romance, adventure and beauty; admission forty cents to 1 p. m.

A Tireless Task

How many of us realize that the De Luxe Motion Picture Theatre was conceived and executed primarily for the sale of class "C" pictures? If you manage a De Luxe, don't sidestep the job you have picked for yourself. It calls for a shrewd, resourceful, tireless sales manager, and a most precarious calling it is. When John Doe spends a dollar in the clothes shop he has something tangible and lasting to show for his transaction, but when he leaves your shop he takes with him only a mental impression. What an unfathomable depth of thought this leads us to! Most of our troubles, indecisions, bad judgment and wasted effort and money is due to the lack of proper analysis of our problems. It's been a great loud-talking-guessing business. But these days are past. Over night the problems of this business have changed from the problems of *ex*tensive development to the problems of *in*tensive development. You have got to grow three blades of grass where one grew before. Personally, I feel that these intensive development problems are by far the most complex the industry has ever had to face. Weekly nuts running into five figures are going to be real jobs in the face of highly developed competitive conditions and increased selective amusement buying. If a good De Luxe can make as much as a whole division, it can also lose as much. It's no longer a mechanical problem of building more seats, it's now a thinking problem of filling more seats. It can be done and for many of us it's going to be a lot more fun. Personally, I dislike extensive development. I'm glad that that period is over. I'd rather grow 45 bushels of wheat on one acre than 45 on three. That's progress.

Development

Extensive development demanded efficiently classified and standardized operations and entertainment merchandise. Chains and groups set up machined types of entertainment with an objective to appeal to a distinct strata of fans. In each case a sufficiently popular blend was found to warrant setting up the machines for its distribution. The population was unknowingly on a forced entertainment ration. Peak prosperity, leisure and money were an artificial stimulant to excessive demands of minority groups of entertainment buyers. The demands and spending power of these minority groups were just as inflated as the stock market. Nevertheless they controlled the box office. Their support was sufficient to warrant the theatre success in such classified and standard entertainment merchandise; but at the exclusion of all other groups of purchasers. Therefore we saw developed almost to the extreme, different theatre entertainment policies, each catering to a select strata of fans. One almost felt that he would wake up some morning and find Liberty carrying an ear phone test on Para-MGM-Fox-WB entertainment blends. All in all it was a splendid little set-up and we sailed along merrily through the greatest prosperity period of any people of any country for all time. Extensive development, mushroom growth, demanded standardization and routine discipline. The impending crisis was inevitable. No peoples have yet learned moderation. They still must have their bellyaches. The fool rode with the wise man. After the holocaust could we pick the grain from the chaff?

Reorganizing

Then, suddenly the pendulum started swinging back- and we found ourselves passing through the most disastrous and widespread depression our country ever knew, and it became not a question of not retreating, but a question of organized retreat and recession that would be the least disastrous when we finally precipitated into an organized line and base of renewed offense; and thus we find ourselves today entrenched, pretty well shot up, dazed and confused. In our pack of tricks are false ideas, unsound policies and useless and dangerous tools, but most menacing and dangerous is the fact that many of us think these ideas true, policies sound, and the old tools still just what we need, because a super-prosperous and tolerant public could once upon a time buy another shirt if they didn't like the tail of the one they had.

Two Ways Out of This Situation:

1. We can blindly and hysterically stick to our old tools and false ideas and fight for the maximum purchasing power in our past established strata of patronage. This strata will be re-employed, gradually readjust itself mentally and financially and accumulate a financial amusement reserve similar to their old purchasing power. On the other hand, no one can blame us for selling duck eggs if we have a good market, but if the duck egg market collapses, that's another thing—more duck eggs won't help it. Perhaps they will never want duck eggs again—that's also another thought.

2. We can adjust our amusement merchandise so that we can immediately absorb all available purchasing power of our past clientele and in additio nbreak into other strata of amusement seekers by discarding our old useless tools and casting out our false and dangerous ideas.

Readjustment

Now, let's check back into these plans more specifically and practically. In the first place, if our strata of patronage has shrunk thirty percent and we confine our efforts to the appeal to this classification, we are faced with a long, slow and discouraging period of recuperation—and what assurance have we that the old things are going to be acceptable to the rising new thoughts and mental and financial adjustment of our patrons. Some businesses are going to recover rapidly and some slowly and some not at all. There were many irregularities in the construction of our past unheard-of prosperity. These weaknesses must be squeezed out.

On the other hand, reverting to Plan No. 2, we must make this elimination ourselves on careful analysis and conclusion and not be content with slow recovery of our strata of patronage, but change our entertainment merchandise so that we can fill in this present gap of lost patronage by appealing to the different strata of amusement seekers. In this way, our recovery will be rapid and substantial and we will be able to adjust ourselves when the time comes into specific entertainment for specific strata of patronage if we find the entertainment purchasing market extensive enough.

They Shop Now

I think that we are all agreed that entertainment patronage is shopping for their merchandise. To have knowledge is one thing, to properly use it is a more complex thing. Our first error is in not properly analyzing this mixed strata of shoppers. The fact that they are shopping is the most encouraging fact for the good merchant. Our trouble has been that they haven't been shopping. We have become too self-satisfied, arrogant and fat on the good and in spite of the bad. We don't know values. We get dizzy and groggy when we are forced to jump up and find our bearings.

We have the facts, we have the experience, we have the means and the tools. All that we lack is the definite knowledge of the necessity for a careful analysis, a precipitation of fact, judicious sound conclusion, a specific unanimously conceived plan of forward progression and our feet on the ground at all times.

Creators and Organizers

The first adjustment that confronts each of us is the definite realization that the transition from extensive development to intensive development HAS TAKEN PLACE. If I am going to raise that 45 bushels of wheat on one acre instead of three I can no longer hitch up the team and doze in the plow seat. The day for the true creator and organizer has come. It's just too bad if you are a showman and can't prove it at the box office.

It is true that the extensive period we have passed through has been complicated by revolutionary technical adjustments in the field. Don't let these confuse you. They made the water a little rougher. Critical local problems have also dominated at times. These injections have befuddled many of us, and that is most unfortunate. If you think we have passed the period of heartaches and backbreaks, just tighten up your belt and take the punches of the next six months.

The first jolt will be the economic adjustment

LEAPER'S SLANT ON GENERAL CONDITIONS

of operating cost. Don't beat around the bush on this, by basing your adjustment on what you have done, what you think you will do, or on your ideals of De Luxe operation. Adjust to your BOX OFFICE—NOW. You will lick the red or it will lick you. Your box office may be made of bronze but it can stand only so many punches; and always keep in mind that the boss is watching for knockouts and no box office will take the count, for he will be just a few rounds ahead of you. You have reached the stage where your expenditures and earnings have a most pertinent relationship. Your job means making your expended dollars work profitably. This is positively your first step up. If you have a future it is a prerequisite.

Diversified Shows

The next punch is readjustment of merchandise. There will be a lot of blood spilt on this round. My personal contention is that diversified entertainment is the soundest solution at this time. No one strata of fans can support your theatre. You have got to diversify your entertainment so that you can appeal to a greater group of entertainment seekers than you have ever appealed to before. Try to appeal to every dollar that is spent for entertainment. Some seats are going to be vacant for a long time. They will be yours or your competitor's. The time is past for Model T methods of manufacturing amusement merchandise. If I am going to put my theatre on a sound, profitable operating basis I've got to take every possible advantage. I can no longer share my problems and profits with associates. Every theatre must exploit every available resource. It can no longer be hampered with routine discipline. If the New York Paramount has definite competitive conditions they must be licked regardless of the cotton crop in Texas. I have to intensively develop my property to the maximum. Remember that the morale and economics of the people have been revolutionized, and we have got to begin at scratch and build up in the face of the new outlook on life. No one can say now what the outstanding vogue of entertainment will be for to-morrow. The people themselves don't know and don't care. It is a conservative question of leadership on our part. We must avoid a hysteria of attempted forced feeding with a highly unbalanced diet of amusement. Never before have we been faced with a graver necessity of institutionalizing our theatres along sane, sound lines of entertainment in keeping with the mood of the people and in keeping with the great traditions of this business as a powerful factor in our civic, social and commercial life. Our task is to make the most efficiently and masterly use of those sound and true principles and elements of entertainment upon which we must draw to keep our theatres in leadership and prosperity.

Know Your Values

The third punch is going to be the heartbreaking one of knowing values. This takes in everything that contacts the several senses of patronage. In these hysterical times your judgment will be severely tested. You must have a definite objective for every expenditure. Every one of your departments is on a merchandising basis. There must be no doubt about the values you are buying. If your service department cannot handle your patrons so that the contact will materially increase the entertainment value of your merchandise, then throw it out, for it has little other function nowadays. They are no longer traffic policemen. Take every item you are buying and selling from the box office to the stage wall, and check coldbloodedly on values.

But, don't forget, the drop curtain has started to rise, bringing to you the most prosperous, constructive and happy years of the show business.

Bill Levey Says:

"Why I believe that the 'Managers' Round Table Club' is a valuable aid to showmen.

"That I know that the organization is a valuable aid to showmen goes without saying, since if it were not I most certainly would not be a member. The numerous tips and the many aids that I have received from reading the club pages in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD have convinced me that the "Managers' Round Table Club" fills a long-felt want in the motion picture industry.

"No manager of a motion picture theatre can afford to ignore this organization, composed of showmen and edited for showmen with invaluable aid for all who read the pages. These pages contain a wealth of information for the newcomer into the field as well as for the old-timer (if there are any of the latter type left).

"The Managers' Round Table Club is now celebrating its third anniversary and the fact that it has lived and grown to a tremendous size during these three years proves emphatically that the club is an invaluable aid to showmen, since the critics (and we had plenty of them in our beginning) were none too kind in their remarks concerning our future welfare and the club has not only withstood the storm but has come out on top bigger and better than ever with the spirit of 'One For All and All For One.' We are still in our infancy, watch us grow."

BEACON THEATRE,
Port Washington, N. Y.

"I believe showmen derive benefit from belonging to the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB and hope it continues to thrive as well as it has in the past."

HOWARD DIETZ,
Director of Publicity & Advertising, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE M. R. T. C.

Born May, 1928. Congratulations! You are three years old and now that you are such a healthy youngster I want to pen a few words of congratulation and praise to you and to wish you heaps of success. May you continue to be the showman's best friend—The Managers' Round Table Club.

What a help you have been to me! You know, Buddy, every picture is not a solid box office smash and sometimes we rack our humble brain to get an idea that will make Mr. and Mrs. Public come to the old box office and leave the coveted admission price. That's where you come in. Through your pages I go, and sure enough, there is a "tie-up" that will fit right in with the picture—it may be a swell cut-out layout, a tie-up with the press, maybe a nifty ad. or some novelty. But it has clicked for someone else and he (or she) was kind enough to write to Chick and he made sure it was mailed to us.

During the year I'll bet I have used your "stuff" about a dozen times and in almost every instance it helped to make the "boss" believe I was still on the job.

During the year we admirers of yours put our heads together and we worked out a dozen or so schemes that were practical and would incite public interest. After they were a proven success—we had a pal of ours photograph them—we rushed them on to your dad and he found room for them among the other treasures in your book.

You know that old phrase—two heads are better than one—is a true saying, and when fifteen or sixteen hundred get together you are bound to get a lot of ideas that you or I may never have thought of. It's ideas that make the world move.

So listen to me, young and true friend—keep on getting the boys and girls to write you—get photographs of all their good deeds and record them in your scrap book. So that from time to time that great army of your admirers can read and reflect and profit by the wise deeds of your pals.

Tell your Dad we are having a great time down here in Altoona—all his friends, Alvin Hostler of the Warner, Jack Maloy of the State, Arthur Himmelein of the Capitol and the humble writer, who is with the Olympic, and Mishler are all like one big happy family—each boosting for each other—trying to uphold the dignity of the greatest business on earth. There is no jealousy existing here—we pull with each other and our business is great and the town folk think we are all "great fellers."

Again wishing you the best of all there is to be had—and assuring you I will keep in touch with you, I am,

Sincerely,

CARL B. SHERRED.

ADS FOR THE WEEKLY PAPER!

By PAUL W. KUNZE

Interstate Theatre, Stoughton, Mass.

The "big-town" boys are apt to smile at the ad layout of Kunze's, on the opposite page, but that's because those "big-towners" have never had to struggle with weekly newspapers in small communities. And then again, they probably never had to sit down and dope out their own advertising unaided by some ad artist. True, they may create their own ads, but the majority of them need help when it comes to working out their creations.

Paul W. Kunze

Inasmuch as there are far more "small-town" theatres than "big-town" houses, this layout of ads will naturally appeal to the army of average theatre managers. Those men who must not only be master showmen, but ad specialists as well. And our hats are off to every one of them. They are the real backbone of this industry and the future leaders as well.

Kunze has set forth his views in a clean-cut manner and we feel that what he has to say on this subject should interest many of his brother managers who are faced with similar conditions. We especially approve of his suggestion that other managers send in their ads so that everyone can have an opportunity of getting a new slant once in a while.

"AFTER sitting up plenty of nights trying to draw up something new and different in ad layouts for a small town weekly paper with three or four program changes to set in, I came to the conclusion that your columns might be a big help to many other managers who must be in the same position as I am.

"This letter is intended as a constructive suggestion for the thousands of smaller theatres and towns with only a weekly paper to work with and who must advertise three or four different programs in their one weekly ad. Regardless of whether advertising in weeklies in towns is of much value or not, it actually must be done to maintain good standing. Space rate is usually very cheap with liberal reader space thrown in and the paper's good-will is really essential. This more or less justifies the use of space in the weeklies, but the big problem I find is to draw up layouts with some newness and originality in them week in and week out. Without some outside suggestions it is hard to keep out of a rut and I believe if you were to publish a few samples of small town weekly layouts that you may be able to collect from various parts of the country, it would be of genuine assistance to a lot of managers.

"Most of the sample ads published in your columns and other sources are drawn for dailies and on some single program and therefore are of no assistance in laying out four changes in a given space. Furthermore, the resources of weekly papers are so limited that they are unable to set up any thing very tricky or artistic and the cheap space rate does not permit it either. As it now is, occasionally in looking through the columns I am able to pick up something and adopt it to my own use, thereby giving us a welcomed touch of newness for the week's ad. I imagine others must be in the same fix, as knowing small town weeklies, they can't help it.

"Am enclosing a few samples of our own one, two, three and four column ads to illustrate what I mean and if you look through them you will realize what a proposition it is to inject a change into the layout. The last ad, marked with pencil, is the latest used, and the layout was suggested in your columns last week. You can see that something like this is a change. Furthermore, with a few published layouts, it would give an opportunity for men to exert their own ideas and originality in changing them around and adapting layouts to their own use.

"I have access to about a dozen papers from other towns and some of the theatre's weekly ads are brutal. Most of them are crowded, too much type, too many mats or else not enough white space; so I feel there is a genuine need for something that will help to pep up smaller town advertising and your columns would be an ideal medium. You can see by the enclosed samples about the limits of weeklies in regard to set-ups. It is comparatively simple to create an effective ad for a daily on a single attraction as press sheets and other aids are available to this type of house, but not quite so easy to put four programs together."

Some Things to Remember About Your Advertising!

1—Don't crowd your copy.
2—Inject novelty and local appeal into your ads.
3—Watch the other fellow's ads for suggestions.
4—Don't waste space.
5—Avoid deception or "dirt."

"In these times, nothing is more important than the intelligent merchandising of pictures to the public by theatres. Any medium that gathers together each week in one place practical ticket selling thoughts from good theatre operators all over the country is a valuable asset. Such is the service rendered by the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB. I have followed this section of the paper with interest during the three years of its existence and I congratulate you upon the fine job it has done, is doing and I hope will continue to do for many years to come.

"If I were a theatre operator I would certainly make it my business to belong to the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB."

RUSSELL HOLMAN,
Advertising Manager,
Paramount-Publix Corporation.

A Gold Mine For Showmen!

MORRIS ROSENTHAL,
Manager, Capitol Theatre.
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

"THREE years is a long time in this business. And to keep a band of moving men who may be here today and in another city tomorrow, together and interested in one subject is a feat to be justly proud of. That you have accomplished this remarkable feat and in addition have given the members of this Round Table Club something of value to them week in and week out, without any cost to them, is something again to feel proud of.

"Where can managers sit down and gather the ideas of hundreds of co-workers? You may be able to talk intimately and personally to half a dozen managers in your particular locality, but through the medium of the Managers' Round Table Club we can exchange ideas with hundreds of our fellow managers. We find out what has been successfully tried out in some other city and the finished product is handed us on a plate. What could be sweeter?

"At this time of the year when you celebrate your third anniversary, the managers are starting to worry about the coming of summer. Each man asks himself what can I do to keep the house out of the red? And the answer will be found in the pages of your column. John Smith did so and so last year in Des Moines, and etc. down the line. If there is a manager in the country today who is alive and on his toes and yet hesitates to join this club, then he still has something to learn. If there was an initiation fee of $50 or $100 to join he would probably say it was worth it. One good idea alone is well worth that sum.

"So here is to many more bigger and better birthdays and may it long reign supreme.

AND EARLE SAYS:

"MY candid opinion of the Managers' Round Table Club is that it is one of the best; yes I will go further than that and say—it is the best thing to date as a valuable aid to showmen anywhere and everywhere, as it seems to go every place that there is a theatre.

"Last summer I was visiting my brother in the north and while there I met some old friends of mine who are showmen. I was a bit surprised that they seemed to be too busy to read the M. R. T. C. One of them, the best showman of the lot, said: "Why should I read that stuff when I have used it all years ago?" Later my brother remarked: "That's the reason he will always be right where he is. He thinks he knows all and has done all. He could be one of the best if he could get away from that idea."

"All due respects to my friend as a showman, I think my brother was right. This man is and has been a good showman, long before I ever got into it, but I don't care how good a man is in any line, there is always some one who can give him new ideas that will 'click.'

"That applies to my opinion of the M. R. T. C. Everyone is bound to find something in its varied articles that will help him some time. If a fellow can only get three or four good ones that will "click" in a year, it has been a great help and well worth the price of the book.

"I have used a number of things and have altered some to suit my town. Some have been good, and some have not been the success here that they were when first used, but the average is on the side of those that have helped.

"Another thing—I have noticed that a number of managers around this section are using stuff that has been taken from the Club columns, and when I get the same pictures I am going to use them, too."

PRESS BOOKS AND STILLS!

By EDDIE HITCHCOCK
Warner Bros. Advt. Dept., Philadelphia, Pa.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: In line with the Club's established policy, members may discuss any subject pertaining to show business, and as in other contributions to these pages, the expressions do not necessarily have to coincide with our own point of view.)

Pressbooks and stills ought to be supervised by men experienced in exhibiting pictures. They know what is suitable material and what isn't. They know the stars they want to sell and the players they want to keep out of their advertising matter and dramatic page picture layouts. That's their business.

Every branch of the motion picture industry has advanced in the past few years but this end of the business and its merchandising branches are in a sorry state. And I'll tell you why.

It has been the constant wail of executives that press books and stills are turned out by the studio principally for the exhibitor in the "sticks." That is just where the industry is making a blunder. THERE ISN'T ANY "STICKS" ANY MORE.

Today is the day of circuit operation. Even the independent owns five or six houses and he wants to merchandise his products just like the key houses. The result is that if the key houses have poor merchandising material to work with the production suffers all along the line!

Who Supervises?

The boys who supervise the taking of stills at the studios forget that in the big cities the big houses go in for life-size photo enlargements or cut-outs. They don't have foresight enough to realize that you can't make a life-size enlargement of a star whose body is cut off from the knees in a still. And if it does happen to be a full length photo, the star is in an awkward position, too ridiculous to reproduce, or that he is posed with some other player who doesn't mean a thing is dynamite in your particular town, or is posed in some position in the still so that you cannot cut him out of it if you want to.

They do not visualize an enlargement of the particular still, cut-out and in the lobby of a big theatre and they do not realize that when the theatre advertising man gets something accidental along that line that every manager in the neighborhood houses dives for it the minute the picture has ended its run. That's why I maintain that there isn't any "sticks" any more.

And that's why a lot of good pictures go by the board for lack of good merchandising. If the advertising man in the key house hasn't got anything satisfactory to work with the picture takes it on the chin and it doesn't end there. The neighborhood manager sells his picture just like the key house sold it and you get an endless chain of poor business right down the line.

I have never worked around a studio and I don't know by what method of reasoning some of the stills are taken. I only know that they appear to be ground out of some kind of a machine that somebody dropped a nickel into.

We'll take an example of what happens when you've got somebody in a picture that you know will probably do your box office more harm than good. A picture, say, with a fairly good supporting cast. The picture has just been booked into your house and you rush to an exchange for material. You take a look at the pressbook and you see that Joe Doakes is featured in the cast and you know that Joe Doakes is all washed up. You don't want his name on your lobby or in your ads. That's easy. Then you get your stuff ready for the newspapers and in looking through the stills this guy Doakes hogs everything. He's all over the place. You can't send out a still for the picture page layouts without Doakes getting in there and the result is that your entire campaign is negative. You are forced to do just what you knew would hurt your chances of doing any business. You might have just as well plastered his name all over the lobby and in your newspaper ads because it isn't a secret any more.

Showmen Needed

It is my opinion that producers would find a worthwhile investment in taking men with theatre experience, place them right on the lot with the cameraman and shoot the kind of stills that the advertising men are weeping for.

I think that an alert man with theatre advertising experience would sit down and plan his campaign on his picture as though he had to rush right out to Kansas City and sell it to the public. He would scan the newspapers throughout the country and constantly watch the trend of theatre merchandising and keep pace with it. He would watch the art used in the advertising and the art used in the layouts by motion picture editors and about two months of the year he would visit the key cities for the purpose of noting the trend in lobby merchandising and contacting the advertising men of the circuits. The thousands of dollars saved on the money heretofore invested in worthless material would more than make it a worthwhile investment for the studio.

The pressbook situation is still in a sad condition. There has been a slight advancement of late, but only in one or two studios and on one or two productions. The ad layouts and outdoor paper are sometimes the most ridiculous concoctions that it is possible for a human brain to conceive. Here's a pressbook before me with an ad in which the art work shows a girl at a telephone. The picture is an intensely dramatic story and the art work in it makes me as enthusiastic to see the production as it does to jump off Brooklyn bridge. The catch lines suggested were taken from the pressbook printed ten years ago and the lithographs on another picture look like a big merchandising effort for a new automobile radiator cap.

The best advertising campaigns have only been as good as the material on hand to work with. "The Vagabond King" had a great national campaign because somebody took a picture of Dennis King holding a flag. "The Rogue Song" swept across the country because somebody took a picture of Lawrence Tibbett with his mouth open.

Since a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, so, theatre advertising and publicity will continue to have a long way to go as long as material emanating from the studios remains in the hands of men inexperienced in the problems of an exhibitor.

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING!

By BUNNY BRYAN
Publix District Publicity Director and Regional Chairman, Managers' Round Table Club

Bunny Bryan

How many times have you heard the statement: "Well, it's something for nothing, so why not take it?"

The writer has heard this so many times he would not even venture the guess as to just how many. Invariably it is in connection with a publicity or merchandising tie-up of one kind or another, and just as invariably, it does not, in the long run, prove to be "something for nothing."

We have never found this a logical premise for obtaining publicity or merchandising co-operation, and we say that as one having handled personally and supervised thousands of publicity stunts and complete campaigns.

Time after time, in the old days, while working as a press agent or exploiteer, whatever you want to call it, we used to "make" the town; contact the house manager and be greeted with the same old, heard-a-thousand-times remark: "Well, I'll be glad to take you over and introduce you to the newspaper people, town's leading merchant, politician or big shot as the case might be, but you're going to find him a tough nut to crack."

A few minutes discussion would usually unearth the information that "he was a tough nut to crack," because so and so had oversold him or maybe not lived up to his promises.

If that were true we knew we had our work cut out for us, but then that was what we were paid to do, and so we got going in order to get through as quickly and efficiently as possible and continue on our route, and here is where the "something for nothing" angle starts developing.

We have never yet found any tie-up attempt really successful if it was put across with the sole idea of giving the other fellow the short end of the stick. The person being contacted might go for it at the start, but when he awakened from his trance, and once began to analyze just what he had obtained for himself, right then and there he began to either become sore, disgusted or just plain distrustful of any and everything smacking of theatrical publicity. In other words, he awakened to the realization that he had bought a bill of goods, and once was usually enough, making it all the more difficult for the next tie-up to be made.

On the other hand, where we had, prior to making the contact, sat down and worked out a complete and comprehensive plan, whereby the person or concern co-operating in the tie-up would derive an equal amount of value from any expected results, and then presented our proposition as a clean-cut merchandising opportunity, an opportunity created, devised and to be, in the main, executed by us, an opportunity that would be mutually beneficial, we very rarely experienced any difficulty in finally bringing the "tough nuts to crack" around to our way of thinking. A tie-up would be made. A friend likewise, and the path smoothed for the next fellow following through.

We don't mean to infer by all this that we have cracked every "tough nut" along the line, but the law of averages has been with us, and we have succeeded many times where the man with the "something for nothing" complex had failed miserably, and it certainly seems that during this present time of absolute need for intelligent thinking and merchandising, such a method of procedure is ab-so-lute-ly necessary.

GET-ACQUAINTED MONTH CAMPAIGN!

By HUGH S. BORLAND
Chicago, Ill.

TO boost business during March we labeled it Armitage Get-Acquainted Month, and got all set for it with the following battery of advertising:

20,000 Pluggers
10,000 Mailing List Cards (sample attached).
200 Window Cards (copy attached).
70,000 Armitage Get-Acquainted Tickets (sample attached).
Canopy Hangers (copy attached).

In addition to this, the front page of the program each week was used for a different article pertaining to Get-Acquainted Month.

We distributed the tickets from three sources:

First: Mailed every one on the mailing list 10 of them.

Second: The merchants in the neighborhood distributed them to their customers.

Third: We had a beautiful girl in the foyer each night giving out these tickets. This girl wore a band on which was printed the following: "Let's get acquainted. Take a ticket."

During the week of February 14 to 21 we ran the following trailer:

"LOOK OUT! A THUNDERBOLT will strike the neighborhood soon with a brand new entertainment idea.

WATCH! WATCH! WATCH!"

Then the following week, which was from February 21 to 28, we ran the second pre-announcement trailer which read:

"THE ENTERTAINMENT THUNDERBOLT has struck the neighborhood and again the Armitage blazes a new trail in theatre entertainment. Starting Monday, March 2, this theatre will inaugurate a brand new idea for the month of March, to be known as ARMITAGE GET-ACQUAINTED MONTH. Watch this screen for further announcement."

Starting March 2, we ran the following trailer at the beginning of COMING ATTRACTIONS:

"ARMITAGE THEATRE GET-ACQUAINTED MONTH IS NOW HERE! Come on, folks, all aboard for ARMITAGE GET-ACQUAINTED MONTH drive. Let's all get together and form a chain of ARMITAGE BOOSTERS and make this a gala time for everyone.

"Here's where you come in, folks, on this new idea.

"The neighborhood changes from time to time and during this period undoubtedly, you have made many new friends and acquaintances. Why not tell them about the Armitage Theatre—the neighborhood's most popular and cozy Talkie Palace of greater entertainment for less money—So they, too, may acquire the Armitage Habit, which has brought so much joy and happiness to thousands of people in the neighborhood.

During the month of March, we will give away Armitage Get-Acquainted Month tickets. These tickets with one paid admission will admit two adults for the price of one, any evening except Saturday, Sunday and Holidays.

Merchants displaying Armitage Get-Acquainted Month cards in their windows will gladly give you Armitage Get-Acquainted Month tickets for the asking, so that you may distribute them among your friends, telling your friends to tell their friends about this new idea for the month of March.

"Remember March! Armitage Get-Acquainted Month."

So many requests have been received at Club headquarters regarding some form of special campaign that this Anniversary contribution from Hugh Borland should be welcomed with open arms by every live-wire showman who is looking for a community stunt to build up business.

Hugh Borland

Borland has been an active theatre man for quite a few years around Chicago and his various forms of activity have already attracted a lot of attention.

Though this resume has been boiled down by Hugh into a brief, bare description, it nevertheless conveys the idea from beginning to end. Those seeking additional "dope" on this sort of campaign should drop a line direct to Borland and we are certain he will gladly comply.

Above we reproduce the window card mentianed in this article and belaw the program caver readers pertaining ta the stunt. The ather two illustrations on this page are also specified in Borland's story.

At the close of COMING ATTRACTIONS we ran the following trailer:

The management of the ARMITAGE THEATRE extends a warm welcome to their many new friends and visitors. We trust that your visit to the Armitage has been a source of the keenest pleasure to you, and we invite you most heartily to come again, bringing your family and your friends.

We hope we may have the pleasure of seeing you, your family and your friends again.

After this drive had been put over, we ran the following trailer of appreciation:

The management of the ARMITAGE THEATRE takes this opportunity to thank the many patrons of this theatre, also the merchants of the neighborhood for their splendid co-operation in making ARMITAGE GET-ACQUAINTED MONTH such a tremendous success.

Thanking you for your co-operation.

The following copy was used on round hangers under canopy, each line representing one hanger.

M. P. HERALD + M. R. T. CLUB

THE LADDER TO ACHIEVEMENT

By EARLE HOLDEN

Earle Holden

I KNOW of no other industry in the entire world whose employees are able to know each other, to get acquainted with each other, to know what little tricks he puts into his trade to secure more business than the show business. And all this is made possible by the Managers Round Table Club of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Starting as an infant not so many months ago, this valuable section of the HERALD has grown today, where it is part of the every-day life of a theatre manager, that is to those who have the honor and the privilege of being a Round Table Member, and the only reason why those on the outside have not come in is because they probably haven't the energy of writing Chick just a couple of lines seeking membership.

Just a 2c Stamp

And those couples of lines, plus a two cent postage stamp, will place a theatre manager into an organization that would reap him hundreds of dollars worth of profits over a year's time. I honestly do not believe that there is a similar organization in existence, nor are their any training schools that could give to the theatre manager today the profits to be derived from the Managers' Round Table Club. Of course, a manager doesn't necessarily have to belong to reap the benefits of the items contained weekly in the HERALD, but once in the Club you have a more heartfelt feeling for the good work that this section is carrying on, and it really spurs you on to new efforts, to make you do things to try and beat the other fellow, not to mention the thousand and one ideas that have already been handed down from other members for the benefit of those who belong.

A Fine Training

I know of no finer training an assistant manager could secure than by reading the Managers Round Table Club, going over each and every article from cover to cover very carefully. For there the master showmen of the world have listed their ideas, their creations that have secured for them more dollars at the box office, and an assistant manager certainly needs this type of help from the olders who know by experience. And the same goes for the younger showman such as myself. Although only a trifle over four years in the game, I believe I can honestly say that through the help of the Managers Round Table Club, I have gained experience that would equal eight years in the game. All because I have read the HERALD each week, and have analyzed each and every article that appears on the club pages. I have gone one step better than this. If any article is especially outstanding, I would clip same and file for future references.

It would appear to me that a way to secure even greater return from the Table items would be to start a file immediately. Clip each and every item that appears and file it under the proper heading. Then when you are stuck for a certain idea, all you have to do, is to get your Round Table file and immediately look up the stunt you are trying to put across. I have found that the suggestions as given by other managers through this medium can in most instances be worked on any attraction, by a little juggling around.

That the Club pages are valuable assets to showmen is no question. I can imagine that hundreds of showmen wait eagerly like I do for the arrival of the HERALD before planning some future campaign on a coming attraction.

I really might term the Club as a super press sheet. A press sheet filled to the brim with ideas that money could not buy, because we have here contributors from all over the world, who belong, and who gather once each week in meeting. Probably the largest meeting of any world organization, even though this meeting occurs in the individual manager's office, with nothing before him but the latest issue of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The organization has today 3,000 members who belong to one of the greatest organizations in the world and the largest. An organization working for the betterment, to bring them something weekly through the Club pages they could not secure elsewhere. Ideas that no one man alone could think up, and money making ideas, too. All for one and one for all seems to be the ideal motto for our Club, and let's support it 100 percent strong, because to it we look for our support in time of need and new ideas in helping us to raise the receipts at the box office.

And by supporting the Club I mean to send in ideas, keep "Chick" so busy that he will not have time to look out the window at the beautiful park he mentioned in the April 4th issue, let alone thinking of playing golf. Remember, however trifling a stunt may appear to you, it may help some other member through the Club pages. And if your brother showman does not belong to the Club get him to join, and if he hasn't the price of a yearly subscription to the HERALD see that he gets the loan of your HERALD each week, but be sure you get it back. You'll need it every day in the week, every week in the year.

"It is my belief that the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE section of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD is a most constructive medium for the interchange of many valuable merchandising ideas whereby exhibitors can further enhance the box office power of the production they are presenting.

"To the producer this section offers a splendid barometer for the regulation of his novelty accessory output on each picture. It conveys the type of material used in the majority of first class circuits, their methods of using them most effectively and numerous other suggestions are often secured from the manner in which some showmen combine the use of accessories and other novelties."

SIX REASONS WHY EVERY LIVE SHOWMAN SHOULD BE A MEMBER OF THE ROUND TABLE CLUB!

By WALLY CALDWELL

LOEW'S VALENTINE THEATRE
TOLEDO, OHIO

1. Offers Mr. Exhibitor "cash in" possibilities heretofore unknown—successful exploitation executed on the pictures he has booked.

2. Makes a showman out of a novice.

3. Makes a live wire showman out of "just a manager."

4. Its suggestions, ideas and schooling develops creative minds to those anxious to forge ahead in this great industry.

5. Opens up many new money-making possibilities.

6. Puts the show brains of the nation in your lap.

Exploitation stunts are as old as Eden. Adam pulled a nifty on Eve and we have been following in his footsteps ever since. But there is so much of good, hard, common-sense in the exchange of exploitation ideas that we chat about through the medium of the M.R.T.C. that even a novice in show business cannot help but absorb some of the ticket-selling ideas—and that's what we are all trying to do.

I can easily do without reading Colliers, the Satevepost (as Walt Winchell terms it) and other mighty fine weekly and monthly periodicals, but if I miss one of Chick's nuggets of wisdom, I feel as though something real and vital was absent. He isn't highbrow and he doesn't preach; but if you wade into the depths of any of his articles, you will find something that you can readily turn into cashable, tangible coin of the realm.

He points out the pitfalls that beset the path of the average house executive. He shows ways to avoid those pitfalls. His amazingly keen insight into the problems that daily confront every manager demonstrate his sincere and tireless study of the subject. And he suggests remedies for all the faults. In every instance, the Club is a guide, a mentor and a teacher all in one.

I have been in many branches of the show business, but I can honestly say that in all my experience I have yet to encounter anything as helpful or as worthwhile following as the Club editorials. They get a new slant on old problems and not only criticizes but shows how to overcome the obstacles mentioned. Every showman in the land as well as the members of the M.R.T.C. owe MOTION PICTURE HERALD a debt of sincere and lasting gratitude.

AN APPRECIATION

The Managers' Round Table Club wishes to thank the many members whose material made this issue possible. If your story is not carried in this issue, be assured that the only reason for omission is lack of space and it will make its appearance in the immediate future.

We do, however, heartily appreciate every member's fine cooperation, not only for this particular issue, but for all Club activities.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

INDIVIDUALITY IN THEATRE MANAGEMENT!

By JOSEPH LUNTZ
Manager, Fox Granada Theatre, Corona, L. I.

Joseph Luntz

PUT in conditions which will allow them to develop in full their ability and capacities, managers will undoubtedly show unexpected and amazing results, provided that no miracles are requested overnight and nothing humanly impossible is asked from them. Certainly there has been great progress made during last year in the way of establishing a "charter of rights" to the theatre managers, who are gradually being invested with a deserved responsibility, due confidence and authority. Started by the New Fox organization this movement, spread already through other circuits, and will continue to enlist more and more followers.

I think that this policy has not met with sufficient attention by the managers and was not given due appreciation. What is the first thought of the manager when he is appointed in charge of a theatre?

The very first thing in my opinion is to find out what kind of population is living in the center of his activity.

In ninety cases out of a hundred he will find out that the population of Corona or Astoria or Brownsville, etc., is quite different than the one on Broadway and 72nd Street or Avenue A and 57th Street; that the tastes of his customers differ greatly from the customers of Roxy or Capitol or 81st Street neighborhood house.

Well, how could he successfully run his neighborhood house before, when he had nothing to say about the booking sheet received Saturday from the main office, in which, for instance, Lawrence Tibbett was booked for Sunday, Monday, and "Last Parade" for Tuesday and Wednesday, when just the opposite dates would make his program.

Now making further acquaintance with his population, manager finds out that American Legion, for instance, is very strong in this neighborhood and that certain woman's club is very influential—that means that he can get enormous results collaborating with them in way of benefit parties, tie-ups, publicity, etc. It hardly meant anything before.

Study Your Neighborhood

Getting further and further in his neighborhood, manager finds out that his neighborhood is particularly fond of anything connected with murder and gangs, and he stresses these points in his exploitation, advertising campaign, circulars, trailers, etc., provided that his campaign always remains clean. How could be do it before? And children problem? How could you have them before, when you had nothing to say in booking, in exploitation, in advertising, in arranging your shows?

Second thought, which naturally comes to you when you take charge of the theatre is its physical appearance. You want to change your front, you want to make your lobby different, you want to make necessary repairing and cleaning inside, etc., etc. Could you do it before? And how easy you do it now? And what miracles accomplish your porters and ushers without any additional cost?

Third thought—and the most important—you want to know if your theatre is red or black, and if it is black how to make it blacker. Could you in many cases before even have an idea, if you are successful or not, if you make money or lose and could you very effectively try to cut your nut.

You can do it now and you will be able to do it more and more later on.

"More Power to the Manager"

Fourth thought—your admission prices. Are they too high or too low? You may want to have a uniform price at all times for children. Do you want the same admission for orchestra and balcony? Do you want more children on Saturday and Sunday, etc., etc. Could you do something about it before?

I could continue these questions and answers indefinitely, but this is not the aim of this contribution to the Managers' Round Table Club Anniversary Number. The point which I endeaver to lead to is that for this coming season, let the brotherhood of managers consolidate their rights given to them by proving that the greater their responsibility, confidence and authority, the greater will be the results.

Make yourself the "personality" in your community, keep your theatre the center of activity in your neighborhood, put it in a physical condition, listen intensively to the wishes and tastes of your public and accordingly direct your publicity, booking and exploitation be popular with small ones (kids are your best press agents) and above all show as much individuality as you can in everything you do and you are bound to be successful.

Individuality in theatre management is the slogan for next season, and if you use your new "charter of rights" wisely and conscientiously, the echo will be, "more power to the manager."

BOX OFFICE COURTESY!

The Patron's First Point of Contact

by Bernard Buchanan, Manager
Colonial Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.

MOST of us seem to concentrate on exploitation, featuring some clever and ingenious method of publicity, to draw the attention of the public, to a coming picture of unusual attraction.

Much benefit may be gained from publicity or exploitation, but, after all, it is but one of the cogs in the gears of "theatrical machinery."

Bernard Buchanan

After you have got people interested in coming to the theatre, what happens when they arrive at the "box office." It seems to me, to be negligible, that nothing appears to be said of the "box office," the first personal point of contact. Surely the importance of the value of functioning efficiently, and courteously, can not be emphasized more strongly in any other department, than the one, where prospective patrons are first met. It is there that the first breath of the entertaining atmosphere of the theatre is felt. What is it is offensive and of a non-welcoming air?

Do we stop to think of the seriousness of this, and do we realize what detrimental results may follow?

It seems remarkable, perhaps almost unbelievable, that in some of our most modern and largest theatres there appears to be something in the box office that is lacking, and it is not in the architecture, no, in the personnel, operating there, just like an automatic machine, instead of a human being, playing the part of a hostess, as should be the case.

Besides being the first point of contact, the box office is the information bureau of the theatre, information being requested by telephone as to name of picture, running time of schedule, name of stars playing in it, coming attractions, etc. Usually such information is readily given, but in a tone suggestive of an every-day duty, rather than the accommodating courtesy of one who is serving the public and wanting to please.

Once a patron is at the theatre, a little courtesy at the box office will probably be overlooked; nevertheless, it will be remembered; but when such discourtesy is shown over the telephone it will probably mean the inquirer will not even come to the theatre. It seems to be the rule that the girl at the box office must be unusually attractive; unfortunately the most attractive ones do not possess any very great personality or business ability, and the result is an inefficient box office. It should be remembered that the public do not come to the theatre to see the cashier, but they will listen to her if she has something worth while to tell them in regard to the entertainment that is being offered to them. Always her attitude should be condescending and accommodating towards the public, ready to oblige regardless of so-called unnecessary trouble; it really means so much to a patron to feel that they are important and that no courtesy can be too great for them.

Let them walk into your theatre feeling in good spirits and they will enjoy the performance, such a patron is not hard to please, but if you hear words of discontent coming from a patron when they leave the theatre, its cause can usually be traced back to the box office; they went into the theatre finding fault and kept on doing so.

There are a lot of other things that could be said about the subject, but they are of a minor nature and of little consequence.

The public always are looking for "something for nothing," and the only thing the theatre has to give away, that does not cost anything, is courtesy, and it will be more appreciated if it starts right at the box office.

JACK D. MARPOLE SAYS:

The Managers' Round Table Club, together with its peppy section in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD each week, is of inestimable value to showmen all over the country. Particularly is it valuable to the men out in the field.

The Club's exchange of ideas and stunts which have been tried and found successful in the various parts of the country is a most splendid move for the general improvement of the exhibiting end of our industry. The editorials, written by the Club's dynamic chairman, touch upon the problems closest to the hearts of theatre man and deal with them in a straightforward, fearless manner.

Last, but not least, the Club's motto, "All For One and One For All," radiates a theme which is fast having its effect in creating a more friendly and fraternal spirit among theatre men. The Club is indeed a splendid factor in our business and should meet with the wholehearted support and cooperation of everyone connected with the operation of theatres.

Theatrical Art Is Theatre Exploitation

By HEINIE JOHNSON, Artist
FRED POLACEK, Manager
R & R Ritz and R & R Queen Theatres,
Big Springs, Texas

WE are fortunate, while discussing the subject of theatre art work, to be able to pass along the views of two men located in a small city. As in the case of other phases of theatre operation and merchandising, the small-town manager always complains that we cite the big city angles and therefore do not touch on their conditions. In this case we are giving you the direct opinions and viewpoints of the average small town.

Fred Polacek

Fred Polacek, the manager, and Heinie Johnson, the theatre artist, are responsible for the operation and advertising of two theatres, the Ritz and the Queen, both located in Big Springs, Texas. Formerly under the control of the R. & R. Theatres, this chain has now passed into the hands of the Hughes Franklin Circuit and we're hoping that they permit this team of showmen to continue to function as in the past, but with the added cooperation of a high-powered organization such as the H-F Theatres can offer.

Heinie Johnson

In featuring theatre art work in this anniversary issue, we honestly feel that it should play a more important part in the general affairs of any theatre, small or large. Up to very recently, only the big first-runs gave any consideration to the question of art work. But more lately the smaller theatres and towns have found it a profitable angle and one that does not cost near as much as they imagined it would. Yet, it adds tremendously to the appearance of the house and the importance of its coming attractions. As a "smash" finish to a good merchandising campaign, it is well worth the few dollars for a theatre to dress up its front in an atmospheric display. Those turned out by Johnson and Polacek are both attractive and inexpensive; that is why we recommend them.

Look over some of this not-too-costly art work and then, put on your thinking cap to figure out ways and means of injecting the same appeal into your own theatre. Talk it over with a local poster artist; maybe you'll find that you can tie up to every one's satisfaction.

Now listen to what Johnson and Polacek have to say:

"No house overdoes it; few do enough of it. It is not "theatre art" if it is not composed of a wide variety of styles and executed in a still greater variety of color schemes. If you are going to limit yourself to a set style or two and work a lot in one or two colors because they look good to you or are easy to work, you might just as well cut it all out and use poster paper as far as results are concerned. One style lettering gets old, one shape front won't do as a repeater, one color scheme used twice won't inform the dear public of a change of pictures.

"Heads are fine if painted in variety and effect; people like to see a picture of the star; they look for and expect it. It informs them quicker than would a printed name. Yet you can enhance the effect of your heads by a front once in a while, which in bold color scheme tells the star's name without use of heads.

"Don't overlook a good chance to get attention value to your art work without use of heads. Some pictures afford great opportunity in this line; . . . for instance, "Mr. Lemon of Orange." Let us use a front of cut-out orange trees full of fruit, a large cut-out lemon, etc. This is variety. . . . You may think we stress this word too much, but let us tell you this: you can't get true 100 per cent variety without application of great thought and study. Neither can you become a great manager, a good carpenter, a real doctor or anything else without concentrated effort; therefore, Mr. Exploiter, study your past effects in unprejudiced style and tell yourself why you are not getting greater results. . . . If your work does not show enough variety, admit it to yourself. . . . Admit that you are not putting in enough thought. . . . Admit all your shortcomings. It does you good and surely can't hurt anything but a false pride. . . . It's a shame that kind of pride ever got such a hold on us poor "dumb doras" of theatrical art world. We have drawbacks enough without it."

"The MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB is probably the most important single feature in film journalism today. Its rise as an exhibitors' Open Forum of merchandising is nothing short of phenomenal, and is its own best endorsement.

"Showmen—those worthy of the name — are invariably endowed with something more than merely good judgment, and cleverness. They usually have what is more important than the other two—INTUITION! And Intuition is one of the first faculties that is stirred by even an initial glance at Chick Lewis' Department. Intuition immediately tells the showman that here is a Round Table Club conducted by a man who, himself, is a showman in every sense of the word; that here is a trade paper service that can prove to be one of the most important factors to him as a source of inspiration and ideas, in the conduct of his business.

"But the ROUND TABLE CLUB'S endorsement does not have to depend on intuition alone. Its pages, crowded with actual episodes of practical merchandising, of campaigns that have been tried and proved, of exhibitors' personal versions as to how they arranged their exploitation economically and effectively—all this, summed up, constitutes a veritable manual of showmanship. The exhibitor is his own best friend when he becomes a member of the Round Table."

DISPLAYS, INSIDE AND OUT

By THEODORE Z. HALMI

Poster Artist, RKO Theatres, Fort Wayne, Ind.

In a few well-chosen words, Ted Halmi expresses himself about art work and the theatre. Inasmuch as we have already shown you several examples of his fine theatre displays, he is far from being a newcomer to these pages.

Note, if you will, the type of art work he uses to help sell the attractions at the RKO Theatres in Fort Wayne, Ind. Certainly these kind of displays would be a credit to any theatre regardless of loccation. Read what Halmi has to say and study his art work. It will be well worth your time.

Here is Halmi at work in his shop on one of those outstanding displays. If ever there were a combination of showman and artist, this is the man entitled to the distinction.

Says Halmi:

To stay on top and keep in pace with this fast-moving, ever-changing world, we must fight with the same weapon; we must be fast moving and ever changing, too. Anything that is a few days old is stale nowadays, and passed up as last week's Sunday paper. You can't apply this better to anything than the front of your house and your inside displays. SOMETHING DIFFERENT! ! Every picture that comes to a theatre has some different angle, that will enable the manager and poster artist to create just as different displays, color schemes and designs.

Striking displays can be created just as easy as fancy ones. I mean striking; bold, simple and powerful, fancy; too many colors and a mess of lines, meaningless designs. Use few colors, one outstanding tone and two or at the most three harmonizing colors.

The most beautiful things in this world are the simple things, and simple designs will catch a person's glimpse much quicker than fancy ones. Fronts and displays make or break the appearance of your house, they can add beauty, refinement, tell your story, all of it in a few words, driving, selling the value of your merchandise in to the would-be patrons' mind.

The merchandise you are selling is made by artists, real artists, and your theatre's front and your displays are selling the accomplished work of these artists. How can you convince them with cheap, knocked-out smeary cards, how can you sell them with effortless, amateurish, thougtless displays? You can't, and in my estimation it is just a waste of time and money. Your displays are important; they tell the world what you are selling and the quality of your displays tell the world the quality of the merchandise you are selling.

This beautiful art job for "Cracked Nuts" is typical of the material being turned out by Halmi. In every respect it is a great lobby attraction. Other theatres ought to go in for more of this kind of display work because it is attractive.

In this front Halmi has created something unusual. The special art work panels on either side of the entrance doors add to the effectiveness of the entire front. These displays are making the RKO houses in Fort Wayne the talk of the country.

DEFINING LOYALTY!

By WALLACE J. BUTLER

Warner Bros. Theatre

San Bernardino, Cal.

Wally Butler

Loyalty is that quality which prompts a person to be true to the things he undertakes. It means definite direction, fixity of purpose, steadfastness.

Upon loyalty depends the beauty of every relationship; without loyalty our lives would be empty. It is a quality woven through the very fabric of one's being, and is never a thing apart. It supplies power, poise, purpose, and works for health and success. It is the governing factor in any organization, and especially can we apply it in our daily relationship in this great Exhibitors' world.

When an employer is in need of a man, for what does he search? Initiative? Imagination? Willingness to put one's shoulder to the wheel? Certainly these things are needed, but of what worth are these without loyalty? Included in that one word are many necessary requirements; honesty, courage, love, dependability, steadfastness. The employer must use shrewd judgment in his selection, realizing that each man chosen must be a contributing factor to the success of his organization. The employer has the right to expect and demand loyalty from his employees; the employees, on the other hand, have the right to expect loyalty from their employer. Each must do his part if the desired result is to be obtained. When an employee is made to feel that his work is important, that he is really a valuable factor in the organization, there is a decided incentive for him to do his best. Each man should be made, by his immediate supervisor, to feel that once an order has been given to him he alone is responsible to the company for the successful execution of that order. He should be made to feel that his supervisor has such trust in him that he can dismiss the matter from his mind with the certainty that the task will be done as assigned. Where this feeling exists it is the duty, the obligation and the pleasure of the employee to act with the loyalty and promptness in doing the things that are entrusted in him. Promotion comes to the man who is willing to make his employer's interests and problems his own. Loyalty makes the interest to which you are loyal yours. Disloyalty removes it from you. Whether anyone knows of your disloyalty is really of little moment, either one way or the other. The real point is, how does it affect you?

At the present time the cry of the land is "Hard Times." Every known organization in the world is going through the greatest crisis of its experience. The theatrical industry has not escaped, the name of Legitimate Showbusiness has not been omitted from the list of those that have suffered tremendous losses. Business is slack and staffs have been cut to the bone. Hundreds of men are idle on account of insufficient demands for their services; many of them are capable and efficient men, several with wives and children.

There has never been a time in the history of show-business that a job has meant more to a man than it does today; nor has there ever been a time in the history of the world when there were more people who wanted our jobs.

How much do our jobs mean to us?

How are we manifesting our loyalty and support? How are we showing our appreciation of what we receive? We are the highest paid in the business and our supervisors always have given our requests favorable consideration. It often has been said that opportunity knocks but once in a lifetime. If that statement is true, now is our opportunity to show our appreciation.

Now, more than ever before, our employers need our loyal support in every phase (from bill boys on up the ladder). Work is for the worker, love is for the lover, art is for the artist. The menial is the man who is disloyal to his work. All useful service is raised to the plane of art when love for the task—or loyalty—is fused with the effort. Let's make the most of the industry by making the most of ourselves.

"The Managers' Round Table Club is one of the best features in any trade publication.

"I read it to find out how the fellow to whom I've always got to sell the picture sells the picture to the public, and if I were a theatre manager, I'd never miss reading it.

"Hardly a week goes by that there isn't something of value somewhere in this department of yours.

"With kindest regards to you and my best wishes for the continued success of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB."

Another scoop for the HERALD. We just got hold of a letter exclusive which you might be interested in. Please keep it quiet because we don't care to have any of the parties interested suing us for something or other. We got it by disguising ourselves like a shoehorn.

The letter is from Al Capone to Mervyn LeRoy, and follows:

DEAR SIR:

I recently had the pleasure of attending a cinema, entitled, if I remember correctly, "Little Caesar." I am writing to you because I noted your name on the screen as its director, and I presume you were the creator of various—shall we say—touches. We shall. Touches, then.

It was, to put it bluntly, Mr. LeRoy, an amazing picture. Your central character, a Mr. Robertson, I believe, was the quaintest person I had ever seen. Not setting myself up as a critique, mind you, but merely an interested onlooker, I found myself annoyed by his constant slurring of r's and dropping of g's. Goodness, a person wouldn't really say, "Yuh gettin' it next, see, the spot for yuh, mug." What is a "spot," Mr. LeRoy? Or a "mug?" There were other words, too.

I attended the performance in company with a few of the executives of my company, and their reactions are equally interesting. Butch Burke, my Chairman of the Board of Directors, took notes throughout the picture, finally emerging with a broad smile and the statement that our corporation had greatly benefitted by your effort. I am not in very close touch with the physical handling of my company so I cannot explain exactly Mr. Burke's excitement, but his remarks seemed to bring out that we had been doing business on a small scale, that our ideas were antiquated, that we were "softies"—that was the word he used, but I know he copied it from Mr. Robertson—and that we weren't taking in enough "territory." He got that word from the picture, too.

Now, my dear Mr. LeRoy, I realize that so far I have not made clear any premise for writing you this letter, but believe me, I have an important reason. Frankly, I am in trouble. And you, Mr. LeRoy, indirectly, are the cause.

It seems that not only did Butch Burke see "Little Caesar," but at the regular Friday Get-Together he urged our men to attend it, too. Unfortunately, they did, and the company has undergone a drastic change.

It was always a boast of mine that Capone, Inc., was composed of gentlemen, a group of scholars and persons of refinement, worthy, indeed of their hire. They are only human, however, and when they saw "Little Caesar," and witnessed how the world expected them to be, of course, they changed.

It was only yesterday, at a board meeting at which I presided, that one of my most genteel aides, an elderly and heretofore almost effeminate gentleman, got up and proposed that we take the wash basins out of the various rest rooms. "What are we anyway, a pack uv sissies?" I can only say, Mr. LeRoy, that I was horrified, and you probably can sense my feeling when I tell you the gentleman is an alumni of Oxford, '04.

So I am sending you this plea, sir, with the hope that you will take it into consideration. I have spent a lifetime building up an organization composed of remarkably worthwhile men, toward whom I feel like a father, and it is a terrible blow for me to see them change before my eyes into such uncouth and boorish fellows. Many of them are young and impressionable, and it is only because they would like to emulate your Mr. Robertson that they have forgotten the training of their youth.

Please grant me this favor. Make another picture. Call it "Big Caesar," maybe, to tie it up with the previous one. And make Mr. Robertson pronounce his "g's" and "r's." I can't tell you the difference it would make to my staff to have them see Mr. Robertson just as they are themselves. They are all trying to speak like roughnecks, and frankly, they are ridiculous, especially the group who are Harvard men. Thankyou, kindly,

ALPHONSE CAPONE

P. S.—If you find you cannot make "Big Caesar" perhaps you would consider an offer to come to Chicago? Butch Burke, my Board of Directors Chairman is getting, as you say, soft.

Judge Refuses to Stop Picketing in Philadelphia

Judge William Kirkpatrick in federal court in Philadelphia has ruled that picketing by union men in front of the Nixon Grand, Broad Street and Montgomery, and the Roxy, Ridge and Leverington, Manayunk, Pa., is not illegal even though it results in financial loss to the owners of the theatres. He refused to grant an injunction to stop the picketing but asserted that the union in the case of the Roxy had exceeded its legal rights in having four pickets who blocked sidewalks and in keeping an automobile parked almost continuously in front of the theatre. He ordered the picket force reduced to two and the automobile kept away from the theatre. The picketing followed substitution by the theatres of non-union for union operators.

"Tarnished Lady" for "Kick In"

Shea's Buffalo played "The Tarnished Lady" on 48 hours' notice, after Clara Bow's "Kick In" had been scheduled.

"Trader Horn" Is Not To Be Double Billed, Insists MGM

In line with the Chicago sentiment against double featuring expressed at its recent national managers' conference, M-G-M is taking steps to prevent the showing of "Trader Horn" on any double feature program.

A clause which pledges the exhibitor not to run the film on the same program with another feature, or with any other picture of more than 4,000 feet, has been inserted in the "Trader Horn" special sales contracts, and provides a $500 penalty for every violation of the agreement. United Artists is understood to be contemplating a similar clause on "City Lights" before general release.

Educational Wins Full Judgment in Contract Default

Educational exchange in Chicago last week won the first unqualified court order issued to satisfy a defaulted contract, in the company's suit against the Patio theatre. This is the first case on record there of a distributor pressing such a suit to its legal conclusion, though there have been numerous instances of compromise settlements.

The suit involved the theatre's refusal to play or pay for 30 Educational films, the balance of the exhibitor's 1929-30 contract. Superior court judge Dennis E. Sullivan ordered payment in full, half at once, and the balance in weekly payments over a five-months period. On default of payment, the exhibitor becomes liable for contempt of court.

Max Stahl, Educational manager, stated the theatre will be permitted to play the 30 films contracted for. In contesting the case, the exhibitor employed two different law firms at different stages of the case, and made several settlement offers, all of which were refused.

The case takes on particular interest in Chicago, by reason of the numerous instances of default on short subject contracts, since double featuring attained wide proportions locally.

Wehrenberg Victor in Fan's Suit

A jury in St. Louis circuit court returned a verdict in favor of Fred H. Wehrenberg, owner of the Michigan, who had been sued for $15,000 damages by Walter Senn, a resident of South St. Louis.

In his petition Senn charged that he had been forcibly ejected by an usher three years ago and permanently injured. The defense of Wehrenberg was that Senn had been requested to leave the theatre because of disorderly conduct.

Wehrenberg, who is president of the M. P. T. O. of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, also operates the Melba and Cinderella in South St. Louis.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Milwaukee, Wis.

DEAR HERALD:

This is our third visit to Milwaukee, and with each recurring visit we are impressed more and more with the cleanliness and general orderliness of the city. Milwaukee's onetime slogan, "THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS," has left an impression on many minds that this is a beer guzzling city whose population is largely made up of bootleggers. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Milwaukee has bootleggers of course. Our own home town is said to have bootleggers, every community has them, but that's because of the system under which the liquor traffic is being regulated.

The unrecorded history of Milwaukee is that some years ago a man by the name of Schlitz opened a bottling works here and his name was plastered on every barn, corncrib and backyard fence West of Ohio, and he became so popular that for a number of years every baby boy born was named either Herman or Adolph. That's why we have so many Hermans and Adolphs today.

As soon as these bottling works were opened the town began to have growing pains and she forged ahead by leaps and bounds, but, as is always the case, there is some guy standing around with a monkey-wrench ready to throw it into the wheels of progress, so there sprang up among them a fella by the name of Andrew, whose sir name was Volstead, who rose up and spake upto them saying, "Hear ye me, verily I say unto you, he who looketh upon the schooner when it foameth over shall be half shot at sunrise," and straightway "Drought," that grim spector, stretched her withering hand over all the nation, which has thrown the politicians into night sweats that will continue even to the third and fourth generations, and there sprang up over all the land, home breweries like asparagus stalks in the night until today bellywash has become more common than "The beer that made Milwaukee famous."

Chicago is the largest suburb Milwaukee has, but Milwaukee isn't bragging about that. Chicago refers to Milwaukee as "The village of Milwaukee" and Milwaukee speaks of Chicago as "That seething cesspool of iniquity," and between them they make the front page every day.

This is probably the first authentic history of Milwaukee that has ever been published, and copies can be had by addressing MOTION PICTURE HERALD, 1790 Broadway, New York, which publication carries our Colyum each week, rain or shine, and which is sold at the ridicuously low cost of $5 for two years and which should be on every library table in the land where the children have arrived at the age of understanding.

We are suggesting this new slogan for Milwaukee, "Try Milwaukee first, but not Milwaukee's thirst."

Permit us to add to the foregoing history that Milwaukee boasts a population of 572,557 law-abiding, home-owning and home-loving citizens who extend a welcome to all those seeking peace and contentment. And let us add also that we find Milwaukee the cleanest and most orderly city we have had the privilege of visiting in all our wanderings. As a summer resort we would recommend Milwaukee, but along in December, when the wind is off Lake Michigan, we believe that Santa Barbara or Long Beach, Cal., would be a nice place to live provided there are no vacant houses in our home town of Neligh, Neb. But speaking of Neligh, Milwaukee reminds us very much of our home town except that we miss the Owls Club at Jess Winn's garage, Doc Reynolds' corner drug store and Otto Hartman ringing the curfew at 10 p. m. by which the old people go to bed and the young ones turn out to make whoopee.

His Mind Turns to Fish

One day last week we drove over to Harvard, Ill., to call on our old friend Eugene Saunders, who operates the Saunders theatre. We had a delightful visit with him, as we always do, and he took us over to the Harvard Herald office and introduced us to Miss Ruth M. Ducey, city editor, who won first prize for the best editorial on Wisconsin and Milwaukee in competition with 450 other editors of Wisconsin and Illinois.

Our friend Saunders told us that between his duties as postmaster, chairman of the city council, member of the school board and county fair commission and operating the Saunders theatre he still finds time to read the HERALD during the closed season on golf and bass fishing. The next time we go back we are going to figure to stay over night, then we can have a real visit.

On our way back from Harvard we called on Charles McCabe, who operates the Liberty theatre at Walworth, Wis. Charley said he was glad to see us, which indicated that Charley was all right in his head, just as he always is. He is still running silent pictures and only one show a week, but that didn't discourage him from renewing his subscription to the magazine, for he said he would be sunk if he didn't.

Boasting Again!

We Sundayed with one of the old wheel horses of the business, Fred C. Hinds, at Whitewater, Wis. Fred made the mistake of taking us up to his home to dinner, where we met his wife and delightful family and sat down to a dinner that we will remember for a long time. Then Fred drove us up to Jefferson where we played two rounds of golf and—well, you tell 'em about it, Fred, we haven't the heart to do it, but tell the truth now boy.

We called at Ft. Atkinson and Jefferson and met the managers of the theatres there and we left with the impression that they knew the business from every angle. They both begged us to renew their subscriptions and we didn't have the heart to refuse them. We are so chicken-hearted that way.

We came over here to Milwaukee especially to call on our long-time friend, Fred S. Meyer, operator of the Alhambra theatre. Fred, you may recall, was the guy who euchered us out of first prize in that beauty contest in the Exhibitors Herald some years back, and he is known as one of the original "FOUR HORSEMEN." Some time ago, when Milwaukee got to slipping because of the misunderstanding between Messrs. Volstead and Schlitz, the Chamber of Commerce, the Elks, the W. C. T. U., and members of the Jewish synagogue got their heads together and decided that something had to be done. So they sent down to Kansas City and got Fred to come up and take the management of the Alhambra theatre and otherwise look after the civic interests of the city. Since which time the town has made wonderful strides under his guidance and now everything is rosy for Milwaukee.

Fred Pulls His Gun

Fred invited us out to his home last night for dinner. His son drove us out to the house but at dinner time Fred called up and said he was detained in a conference with one of the New York officers of the company and could not be present. Did you ever eat dinner at Fred's home? No? Well, that's just too bad. Did you ever meet Mrs. Meyer and her children? No? Well, that's worse yet. We can't describe that dinner to you because we are not familiar with the names of all the things she served, and we don't like to brag on a married lady too strongly publicly for fear it might raise goose-pimples on her husband, but will be bold enough to say that Mrs. Meyer is one of the most delightful ladies we have ever met, and we can't understand how she has put up with Fred as long as she has, but maybe that's because of their two delightful children who would be the joy of any family.

Fred is about the busiest man in Milwaukee. He is president of the state theatremen's association, and as such is largely responsible for the defeat of a number of legislative bills that would have been ruinous to the exhibitors had they become a law, and in this connection it might be in order to add that any exhibitor in the state who fails to associate himself with the organization of theatremen and lend his moral support to the organization and contribute his just proportion to the expense, is not performing his duty as an exhibitor. "Let George do it" has been the ruination of many a man and many a business. After awhile George will get discouraged and lay down on the job, and then what? Think it over.

We have just finished playing TRADER HORN at our Durfee Theatre, Fall River, Mass., and after a very successful run played to capacity business, we are bringing the picture back for a return engagement. Recording Mr. Gandhi

THE recording of the elusive and reluctant Mahatma Gandhi by Fox Movietone News, presented this week at the Embassy on Broadway, is one of the romantically adventurous achievements of the sound screen. The labors of "Crew 42," struggling with ponderous equipment through jungle villages in a tropic temperature of 130 degrees and their struggles with the moods of the strange Gandhi, surpass in heroic quality many a more loudly proclaimed feat of the cinema.

A Romance in Sound

A THRILL for the world of music comes with the announcement in Vienna of the discovery of six long forgotten and unknown waltz songs by Franz Schubert. Their recent presentation at the Musikvereinsaal was a rare event in musical history. They were composed in 1824, a year in which Schubert was pot boiling by giving music lessons to the daughters of the Countess Esterhazy in Zeliz, then in Hungary, now Czechoslovakia. Some way the manuscripts survived at Esterhazy Castle through the storms of wars and whims of fortune to be discovered at last and to now complete Schubert's cycle of "Deutsche taenze." Some way, one may hope and fancy, they will find their way to the sound screen and the audiences of the world in this medium of which Franz Schubert never dreamed.

Recognizing a Real Short

AN advertising and promotional campaign of special merit and interest has been put behind "How I Play Golf," with Mr. Bobby Jones, by Warner Brothers. This is an especially notable campaign in the cool sanity of the treatment and the plain dignity of the copy and displays. The advertisers in this conspicuous instance have not sought to gild the lily. The merit of the product and the public interest in the personality have been trusted to do the selling without artificial elaboration. Yet a more than usual promotional support has been given the presentation. By such means can the short product be freed of the curse of that word "filler." If now some ingenious person will give us a better word for "short," meaning all that it is taken to mean in the industry, we shall be grateful.

Roxy's Basic Idea

UNTIL Mr. William A. Johnston's interview presented in this week's issue, Mr. Samuel L. Rothafel had been wrapped in a long and non-committal silence. And now that he has spoken one may observe that the energetic Roxy has in these fallow months been doing a deal of analytical thinking. There is more than criticism involved when he remarks that he foresees "a program of entertainment of pictures only, the feature and its complement of short features selected carefully and offered to the public at a moderate price." That, most of us can recall, is precisely the policy of operation on which Roxy built his fame and in so building built for the whole institution of the screen. The first idea he ever had is still his best.

They'll Have to "Get By"

THE passing of the "sponsored" picture idea now cheerfully recorded does not at all mean that pictures pertaining to the industrial and commercial activities of the nation will be barred from the screen. A considerable portion of the news and pictorial interest of the public of this industrial commonwealth necessarily pertains to products and related activities. But in a large way these aspects of our economic activity will be put on the basis of winning their way to the screen sheerly on their news and entertainment merit. That is the same standard of judgment which the same material has to meet to get on page one of a well edited newspaper. If his story is good enough a press agent can get past any editor. That is a safe standard for the newsreel editors and producers for the screen.

Picking on the Pictures, Again

IN SEQUEL to the appearance in the New York Times of an erroneous version of Two-Gun Crowley's valedictory letter, discussed on this page recently, the country is now enjoying a flood of expressions based on the error by which Crowley was credited with blaming the films for his murderous impulses. All the persistent and chronic writers of letters to the papers, the syndicate writers and fertile penned correspondents are spreading preachments in print concerning the motion picture, based entirely on the fabrication we have already ventilated.

Latest is a letter from Mr. John H. Sumner, secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, who takes his pen in hand to make remarks to the World-Telegram (N.Y.). If Mr. Sumner's diligence in reading the papers was broad enough to look for the truth as well as for provocation for his utterances he perhaps would not have betrayed himself into this misfounded expresson.

Picking on the pictures has become a chronic habit among the professional bellyachers of this free land of ours. Thirty-five years ago, when the screen was born, the bicycle was held to be to blame for most of society's troubles. We forecast that television will likely be the next sacrificial goat. We do not know what will be the matter with television, but there will be something as dastardly as the eyes of the professional beholders can see.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

AN executive, an outstanding figure in motion pictures, inevitably enjoys a social evening with former business associates and old acquaintances from whom he has been separated in later years, whenever he is afforded the opportunity while in Chicago, where the former "friends" reside. A customary evening's diversion, when these good fellows get together, is a card game in the picture executive's hotel room. In the past, the stakes have been moderately high. All participants have been prosperous business men, but none, with the exception of the film man, are to be considered wealthy. An evening's winnings amounted to a tidy sum. The picture executive, in the past, has found the cards running his way as often as not.

Recently, the group gathered again in the film man's suite in a leading Chicago hotel. At the end of the evening's session the film executive wrote a check for $27,000, payable to the game's banker. In the morning, a friend of the host's, a participant in the game—returned to the film executive's room and delivered to him a check for $5,200, the friend's share of the night's winnings. It was a debt of conscience, he said. A marked deck had been used.

Nothing will be done about the incident, but the old reunions in Chicago are done forever.

It's a Crool Woild!

Reports sifting in about the recent shake-up at one of the major Coast studios when practically the entire writing staff of one company was let out, in addition to dozens of smaller fry, seems to show that the powers that be had small consideration for the employees.

So far as can be learned, no notice was given anyone. Many of those discharged were told when they left the lot Saturday that they need not return Monday morning. One writer was at dinner Saturday night when he was called to the telephone and told that he was through.

Some of the discharged ones went back to the studio Monday to get their personal belongings. They found that their offices had been cleaned out and their personal goods thrown into boxes in a corner.

Half in Fun, Whole in Earnest

There are mute, inglorious heroes in Hollywood just as there are everywhere else.

The description of the one we give here will be recognized by many of the principals of a large studio, where not the least of his important duties is to heal all the many trouble spots that constantly break forth among the temperamental personnel.

He is tall, slow of speech—with a Southwestern drawl—kindly of eye and smile, keen in his knowledge of human nature. He is called the "Iron Duke" and whether his hand falls harshly or gently they all like him, just the same.

One day a director kicked over the traces. He wanted to cast a certain heavy from outside the lot in the face of the fact that the studio had under contract at high salary a more suitable and famous heavy.

He was obdurate, unreasonable, irascible; so the trouble man retired to consider the case. This director had a habit of forgetting his debts and the minions of the law were generally camping on his trail.

The "Iron Duke" called him up. "Listen," he drawled gently, "the sheriff is here—wants you."

"Oh—" groaned the director. "Can't you do something?"

"Well, I fixed it for you last week, you know. And once before—remember?"

The director pleaded at length.

"Alright," said the gentle "Duke," finally. "Guess I can take care of it—By the way, changed your mind about the heavy?"

"Oh, sure," replied the director, "long ago; I was only kidding."

"I knew you were," said the Iron Duke.

HOLLYWOOD is such a day-in-and-out land of make-believe that to get a lasting job done in a studio it must be labelled "practical."

An efficiency engineer in one of the studios was horrified one day to find a fire hazard. A large room back of the wardrobe department had been hastily cleared for office space for the script department. The sole exit was through the inflammable materials of the wardrobe. So he made out an order for a fire escape and smeared it over with "Immediate," "Don't Delay," "Hurry This," etc.

The next day he found some carpenters making a fire escape out of boards, followed by painters who added a metal finish. With fire in his eye, he rushed to the construction department.

"We thought you wanted a set," growled the construction head. "Why not? When you want something else, say 'practical'!"

A Fast One—and How!

Carroll Dunning, owner of the Dunning process, is going to enroll as a pupil at the Berlitz School of Languages. He intends to learn several languages so that picture producers cannot put anything over on him again. And this is why.

"Some months ago," Dunning says, "we made some shots for a picture produced by one of the big companies with a famous star. Later we made similar shots for a German version of the picture, for which we charged $350. The company complained about the cost and I told the executive that the same charge would be made for any other versions. That, as I supposed, ended the matter as the company obviously did not want to pay that amount.

"Recently I sat in a projection room in Berlin and saw this German version. A Swedish picture man, sitting next to me, remarked that he had seen the Swedish version in his own country.

"'You mean this same German version, don't you?' I asked.

"'Not at all,' he answered. 'I mean the Swedish version.'

"I knew no Swedish version had been made by us so I investigated, and do you know what those slickers had done? After the German version had been shot the first time the director ordered a retake and the star was instructed that time to read her lines in Swedish. I didn't know she was not still talking German. So I was out just $350. But after I get through with the Berlitz School they won't be able to do that to me again."

SPONSORED FILM DOES FADEOUT WITH LEADING FILM COMPANIES

Indications Are That with Expiration of Present Contracts Advertising Reel Program Will Be Discontinued— Several Concerns Are Explicit

By TERRY RAMSAYE

The tentative and experimental invasion of the theatre screen by advertising pictures, avowed or "sponsored," has met defeat. The movement, so controversially discussed within the industry for more than a year, with this week entered into a fade-out phase with every evidence of finality.

It was permitted to transpire that Paramount Publix would, with the completion of existing contracts, discontinue the making and presentation of sponsored pictures. Rapidly came from other major producer-distributors, either reassertions of a policy of disapproval of the sponsored picture idea or kindred declarations of policy.

No official statements were made. The masters of the motion picture industry appeared pleasantly and affably anxious to just softly let the matter drop with the soft impact of a feather on a velvet rug. It appears most likely that a few months hence it will be impossible to find anyone willing to admit that they ever had such a notion as putting advertising in any garb on the theatre screen.

The attitude of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was made explicit in a recent interview with Nicholas M. Schenck in which he said that while opposed to the sponsored or other advertising picture he regretfully thought that it might be possible that his company would have to consider it in the event that all the other concerns entered this activity. It is now clear that no such eventuation is in sight.

RKO Radio Pictures Corporation, which has for some months been considering production and distribution of sponsored pictures, declined to enter into an official discussion of the present status of the movement, but a high official of that concern pointed out that nothing more than the most tentative experiment with two pictures had been attempted. It was permitted to be the impression that the policy of this outstanding representative of the electrical interests' participation in the industry would not be any more aggressive in the future in this aspect of the enterprise. Which, in simple terms may be taken to mean that if the rest of the industry is done with sponsored and advertising pictures for theatre screen, then Radio is.

Meanwhile it was understood that Amedee J. Van Beuren, who had started to set up an organization for the production of sponsored shorts, presumably for Radio distribution and presentation, had dismantled and disbanded that arm of his organization. From sources close to Mr. Van Beuren it is to be gathered that he entered into this undertaking only with the misgiving that there was a possibility that development of sponsored shorts might prove serious competition for his conspicuously successful "Sportlights," "Fables" and like

Special Theatre Month

Distributors and exhibitors of Perth, Australia, have set in motion a co-operative drive for business, with a "Come-to-Picture Month" providing the impetus. Too far removed from the more important Eastern cities to benefit from nation-wide advertising and exploitation, Perth has devised this plan to promote business.

Hoyts and Union Theatres, with head-offices in Sydney, have okayed the proposition from their end. They will assist with contributions to a common pool. The move embraces co-operative advertising, the enlistment of support of civic authorities, press encouragement and individual stunts by each house, whether city or suburban, along the lines of the "Greater Movie Season" of the Hays organization in 1928.

Warner Deal with Publix Near Set

Warners and Paramount are near agreement relative to interbooking of each other's productions.

"The effect of intersale and purchase of films between them would enhance profits to a large extent by increasing the number of theatres in which the products of each company would be shown," states the Daily Investment News (N. Y.), in discussing the deal.

Negotiations on the part of Warners for the booking of Paramount pictures has practically reached the signature phase, it is understood.

Earnings that will probably result from a resumption of interbooking relationship between the companies probably will not show up perceptibly in the income accounts until after September, when contracts now under discussion are likely to go into effect.

Warner Brothers recently booked a few Paramount pictures for some of its theatres, principally at Philadelphia.

Erpi Querying Its Rights on Sale of Parts

The legal department of Western Electric is understood to have started digging into the technical aspects of Erpi's legal right to prevent users of Electrical Research's sound devices from purchasing parts from other manufacturers.

The reported steady diversion of parts from Erpi to other companies is said to have influenced the decision to determine what steps could be taken in a legal way to halt the use of non-Erpi parts on Western Electric theatre sound units.

Coast Again Hears Of RKO Shakeup

A shake-up is pending at the RKO Hollywood studios, it is understood; this despite assurances of Hiram Brown and David Sarnoff, who told studio executives at a Coast RKO banquet last week that there were no personnel changes contemplated.

Denial by Brown and Sarnoff, however, was concentrated on the reported resignation of William Le Baron as RKO production chief. The current rumors state that LeBaron is set, but changes will take place among associate producers and subordinate executives.

Henry Hobart is already out, with Bertram Millhauser and Myles Connolly believed on the way out. Changes in production policies are said to be anticipated, with "younger men of different type" taking the posts held by those who go.

Louis O. Sarecky is set, having received a new term contract.

Sheehan to Await Meeting

W. R. Sheehan, Fox production chief, is expected to remain in New York for the stockholders' meeting, June 10, and return to Hollywood.

PICTURES NOW PANDERING, NOT CATERING, TO PUBLIC

Roxy in his new office with RKO

ROXY tells
WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

SPEAKING for the columns of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and in the only interview given out on his visit to Hollywood, S. L. Rothafel coined two epigrams and smiled over their satisfying neatness.

"Motion pictures," said he, "are pandering, not catering, to the public."

And again—"People now go to see pictures at the theatres; they used to go to the theatre to see pictures."

If these terse observations seem cryptic here is the explanation, which also comprises Roxy's criticism of the picture situation as it exists today.

When talking pictures came in several new strata of the public began frequenting the theatres, believing that they would be offered something more satisfying. If we have lost them, and apparently we have lost people somewhere along the attendance line, it is due to the fact that pictures pander too much to the taste of those who want to be shocked, and cater too little to the very large public which wants its brain, not its nerves, aroused. In other words, pictures pander down too much and cater up too little.

The cry of the theatres today is for variety in its picture fare.

"You know and I know," said Roxy, "that in the inspiring days of the silents producers went far afield for their picture ingredients. Wherever a famous head loomed up—in art, literature, opera, the stage—they went after it. They reached for the moon.

"Many efforts resulted in gruelling disappointment. But at least the result was variety. The public looked to the movies for surprising ventures, for their great compass of the world's activities, for their indomitable enterprise, their amazing efforts.

"'Cimarron' was an achievement. But how many such daring and admirable steps are we taking today? What has the public—the broad public—to inspire its interest?

"We pander too much to one kind of taste; and this particular public is shopping now for its particular kind of entertainment.

"That is why I say people go to see pictures at the theatres.

"The theatres have ceased to be institutions; places to which the people would go regularly, relying upon them for a rounded and satisfying entertainment.

"You don't hear people say any more: 'Let's go to the movies.' They shop for entertainment bargains.

"What of the future?"

"I foresee, as successful, a program of entertainment of motion pictures only; the feature and its complement of short features selected carefully for well rounded satisfaction, and offered to the public at a moderate price. Then music. There will be great advances in music.

"In the picture?"

"Yes, and also the theatre music will come back, to a degree.

"Then, there will be vaudeville. Big time and bush league. How the two will work out I don't know. But vaudeville will be separate and distinct from pictures. I can see no future for combination bills."

"Will you have these separate theatres in Radio City?"

"I cannot talk about Radio City," Roxy replied. "I have many plans in view. First, I have to think of construction problems."

Rothafel described his presence in Hollywood by saying that he was here only as an observer. He is studying vaudeville as well as pictures. His trip takes him to San Francisco, Seattle, Vancouver and back to New York. Later he will go to Europe. His observing tour is a follow-up to the Roxy and his Gang trip, during the nine weeks of which he showed to 350,000 people, and secured an idea of audience wants in all sections east of the Rockies.

"There are no more 'sticks' in the land," said he, "and no more hicks. All sectional distances and differences have been completely levelled by the radio, magazines and newspapers. The show business today appeals to a country of unified knowledge and taste requirements."

RED RUSSIA GETS SUCCESS STORY TO TALKING SCREEN OF AMERICA

Amkino Presents Five Year Plan for Distribution

Lecture in English is Recorded to Acompany Film—Remarks of The Department of State

Commercially depressed America is to see and hear on the screen a "success story" in a feature length talking picture entitled "The Five Year Plan—Russia's Remaking."

Stalin's message, presented as a recording of the Russia of today, is first to reach the screen in a series of special roadshow presentations intended to open the way for a general distribution. The picture has its premier Friday night at the Central Theatre in New York.

This is an achievement of the activities of the Amkino Corporation, American distributors for Soyuzkino, the exporting syndicate for Russia's picture makers.

The picture is an assembly of Russian industrial and folk pictures, put together at the Long Island City studio of Pathe News and Review, with an accompanying talk in English. The picture was "synchronized by Pathe News at the Pathe studios, using RCA Photophone equipment, in accordance with an agreement between Amkino and Pathe News," according to Leon I. Monosson, director of Amkino.

"The dialogue was written for the film by a leading American economist, author of several recent books on Russia and familiar with the developments of the Five Year Plan," said Mr. Monosson.

The arrangement by which the film bears the impress of Pathe News and RCA Photophone is a part of a deal between Pathe News, Inc., and Amkino by which some 1,400 feet of Russian material, identical or akin to the content of the feature length picture, was made available to the newsreel for a series of eight news subjects now in circulation.

That the recording of this picture by the RCA Photophone system does not imply an endorsation of or responsibility for the product by that subsidiary of the Radio Corporation, and related electrical interests, has been pointed out by an officer in authority in the Photophone organization. The standard contract between RCA Photophone and its licensees, it was pointed out, carries a provision which in substance makes the licensee responsible for what the sound mechanism may record and utter. This, it was observed, is the ordinary basis on which most other services and commodities are sold or leased, including typewriters, motor cars, machine guns, denatured alcohol and Victrolas.

In anticipation that the presentation of the Stalin "Five Year Plan" picture would prove a subject fertile of interest and discussion in the industry and in various arms of the government, sundry organizations and

Fox News Reel Unit for Sydney

Arrival in Sydney, Australia, from Paris, of Harry Lawrenson to establish a Fox Movietone newsreel unit, is accompanied by strong rumors that, in the next few months, Fox will set up a large studio on grounds adjacent to Sydney, in furtherance of a plan to make Australian talking features.

The idea is said to be a direct result of recommendations made to New York executives by Stanley S. Crick, Sydney head of Fox, recommendations strengthened by the success of the Fox Australasian Movietone News. This latter venture, in two years, has grown from a reel consisting of two items a week, to a full-length edition, purely domestic in make-up, and ideal for overseas exhibition.

The prospect of Fox entering into feature production here is hailed as good news in Sydney.

Hughes-Franklin Circuit Now Owns More Than 100 Houses

The Hughes-Franklin circuit has passed the 100 mark, recent acquisition of the Mann string in northern California sending the total to approximately 108.

Although physical operation of the Robb & Rowley Texas circuit was taken over by H-F several weeks ago, final papers were not signed until the past week. Entire control goes to the Hughes venture, with Harold Robb and Ed Rowley continuing as Southern division chiefs.

Berlin Reduces Admission Tax

The tax committee of the municipal council of Berlin, has approved entertainment tax reductions for motion picture theatres whose maximum admission price is not more than one mark. Existing tax rates are to be dropped from 15 to 12 per cent., from 12½ to 10 per cent and from nine to seven percent, respectively.

However, the council failed to provide alleviation for the summer season as requested by exhibitors.

Interests Agree, Disagree On Illinois Film Legislation

Organizations in Springfield, Illinois capital, fighting for and against industry legislation, find themselves confused, one moment fighting together for one measure, the next at odds on another.

Warners to Absorb First National Unit in England

Physical merging of Warner-First National branches in England, and possibly in other European keys, is expected at the end of summer.

First National has continued as more or less of a separate unit in the U. S. because of a Clayton act suit filed against Warners by the Federal government, shortly after Warners purchased First National.

FOX 1930 REPORT TO SHOW $3.70 NET PER SHARE TO STOCKHOLDERS

Quite a Thing, Ol' Top

News and trade paper reporters in London are, apparently, not as lucky as their brothers in the States, where luncheons and dinners to the press by national picture companies are tendered frequently.

In London, however, this is a rarity, judging from headlines in British papers following a luncheon in connection with Paramount's London "Skippy" premiere.

One newspaper, in blaizng captions, headed its account of the luncheon in this manner:

"FEEDING THE PRESS BOYS.—One of the most original press functions yet staged in connection with the British trade, etc., etc."

British Sunday Law Not Likely Till Fall

The British trade no longer expects passage of the Sunday show bill now in the House of Commons before late next fall. Business in Parliament indicates that the measure will not come before Standing Committee B until June, and it is certain to receive lengthy discussion there. The third reading is therefore likely to be late.

It is also pointed out in London that after third reading the bill will have to go to the House of Lords, and if any changes are made there, these will have to be again debated and passed upon in the Commons.

May Try Acts

Warners may try eight "name" acts and pictures at the Warner Hollywood, Broadway first-run in New York. The house originally opened as a two-a-day, closed, then reopened with a grind policy, was again darkened and attempts made to foster a legit policy. This did not materialize and the house again tried a two-a-day. It is now housing the Broadway showing of "Svengali."

Warners also operate the Winter Garden, Warners and Strand nearby.

"Herald" Learns Details Of Auditing Systems

Stockholders to Receive Report on June 1—Action on $4 Dividend Rate is Anticipated

Annual report of Fox Corporation for the fiscal year 1930 is scheduled to reach the stockholders June 1st, ten days before the annual meeting.

Although the contents of the report were a carefully guarded secret, it has been learned by MOTION PICTURE HERALD that the report will show a net operating profit very close to the net operating profit of 1929, which was $9,469,000.

On the basis of this figure, earnings for 1930 will approximate $3.70 per share on the shares outstanding at the close of the year. Leaving out of consideration certain extraordinary expenses, the earnings, it is reported, would have been approximately $4 per share.

Harley L. Clarke

No forecast could be secured regarding the probable action of the Board of Directors on the annual dividend. The board to be elected at the stockholders' meeting on June 10 will meet immediately after the stockholders' meeting. There will be represented on this board several new names, men high in financial circles who are associated with the banks which sponsored the recent Fox refinancing.

The dividend rate on Fox has been $4 per year. Wall Street has long expected a reduction in the rate. The fact that the company's earnings for 1930 are thirty cents short of the current dividend rate would indicate a reduction. The fact that Fox shares sold as low as 11⅝ this year on the New York Stock Exchange would indicate that the speculative community has already discounted a reduction in dividend rate.

Clarke to Explain Auditiing Systems

It is understood that the report will carry a most complete statement to the stockholders over the signature of Harley L. Clarke, in which he will explain in detail to the stockholders the accounting methods under which the Fox Film Corporation is operating and upon which the company's net earnings were determined.

This detailed explanation is the result of a difference of opinion between Touche Niven & Company and Price, Waterhouse & Company, certified public accountants, over formulae of amortization, a disagreement which has delayed the completion of

Films and Wage Scales

Many manufacturers may be able to maintain present wage scales and still sell their products at today's low prices by using motion pictures to analyze manufacturing methods. This was demonstrated at a meeting of the Chicago chapter of the Society of Industrial Engineers.

Films, it was pointed out, can be used to cut down manufacturing costs by affording a means of detecting waste motion in factory operations photographed by a motion picture camera at the rate of 1,000 to 4,000 pictures per minute. The movies of such operations are studied by industrial engineers and wrong methods discovered and corrected.

"Let Antagonists Make Own Films"

"Persons laden with purposes, missions, messages and propaganda had best learn to make their own motion pictures, because the amusement industry is too busy with its business of being amusing to take care of outside jobs," Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, remarked in a talk at the annual meeting of the Rutherford Better Films Committee at the Union Club at Rutherford, N. J., this week.

The Rutherford organization works in affiliation with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Due to its activities in the selection and endorsement of pictures, as opposed to the policy of condemnations for the unacceptable, Rutherford has escaped censorship and its evils.

Mrs. Harry G. Grover, president of the committee, was complimented on the labors of the organization by Mayor Harold Frizzoll and other speakers. Mr. and Mrs. Wilton A. Barrett and other executives of the National Board of Review attended the function.

Small Towns Do Not Approve Of "Bell-Hop" Usher Garb

A new slant on the uniformed usher situation is brought up by E. C. Rhoden, division manager of Midwest Theatres, with that official advocating the "personalizing" of the theatre staff. Rhoden declares he has found that in small towns, and suburban patronage houses, the uniforming of ushers has tended to establish a barrier between the public and the theatre.

Klangfilm Wins Patent Case

Klangfilm, German company, has won a patent infringement suit against Melorob-Maschinen and a Berlin theatre. Klangfilm also won a financial consideration for damages in the same case.

QUIGLEY TO ESTABLISH DAILY IN WORLD FILM PRODUCTION CAPITAL

More on That Gang Cycle

The New York "Daily Mirror" wonders "what the new theme, if any, will be in the movies, the magazines, the newspapers and the stage. . . . And when the cycle will switch? . . . Something about to be done about the endless gangster series. . . . The Broadway audiences are commencing to titter at 'em, which is as it should be. . . . The whole mess is strictly one re-write after the other. . . . The surest way to be artificial, as the sages had it, is to try to be natural according to some other feller's recipe."

Dual Bills Are Not an "Evil," Says Freuler

Despite the hectic battle now being waged in various industry quarters against the so-called double bill "evil," John R. Freuler, president of Big 4 and a circuit operator in the Midwest, states that "double-billing is an old practice which exhibitors are finding profitable, and its gain, far from 'overfeeding' the public, is satisfying the demand for diversity which a single talking feature has failed to deliver.

"The situation at the beginning of the talkie era was such that even one feature, per theatre, was unprocurable," he says. "Now, however, the supply is reaching a normal level, with the output meeting the double-bill demand.

"Even first-runs find, by the simple method of a check-up on box-office receipts over the past several years, that double-bills have the effect of filling empty seats. And when a policy fills seats—there is no argument. First-run theatres, with general conditions touching bottom, have, in many instances, found it necessary to substitute an extra feature for an expensive stage show. That grosses should hold up and even better themselves under such circumstances proves that double-bills are the solution of the theatres at the moment. Though shorts help to balance a program, the advertising value of two features must be conceded to be greater.

RKO Salaries Will Remain "Stet"

RKO theatre and picture units will not cut salaries, this decision having been arrived at following a series of organization meetings which took place when Paramount Publix chiefs conferred to discuss the same subject.

William A. Johnston to Edit Publication

Leo Meehan Chosen General Manager of New Addition to Group Of International Papers

On June 8, Martin Quigley, publisher and editor-in-chief of Quigley Publications, will launch THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD to "promote, defend and preserve the best interests of motion picture production and all persons identified with motion picture production, seeking to serve alike, from the office boy to the star and the production chief."

THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD, which supplements the Quigley group of international motion picture papers, will be published daily at Pacific States Life building, Hollywood, Cal.

William Johnston Editor

William A. Johnston, former editor of Motion Picture News, and conversant with all problems confronting the industry, will be editor of the new journal. Leo Meehan, journalist and film director, will be general manager of the publication.

In announcing the new project, Mr. Quigley said:

"This journal enters the field with the substantial background of 16 years of the successful operation of the Quigley Publishing Company, which in its array of periodicals of the screen combines and preserves and vivifies all the heritage of motion picture business publication from the day when the first issue of the first number of the first journal, The Film Index of 1906, went to press.

"An experienced and expert staff made up of personnel of high status in the field of publication and of wide experience in the world of the motion picture and Hollywood has been assembled to attune the new daily journal to its task and its community.

"The repertorial staff will be made up of aggressive young men and women alert to the interest and news interests of this industry and of Hollywood.

Linked With Quigley Group

"Meanwhile, the whole of the facilities of the entire group of Quigley Publications will be at the service by air and wire toward the making of THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD, assisting it in presenting in swift summary the day's developments and important news events wherever they may occur in the world map of the motion picture.

"THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD is thus linked with MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the national weekly of the industry with its tremendous, complete and unparalleled coverage of exhibitors, the exhibition field, and the departments of distribution and administration which center about the crossroads of the world in Times Square, and with its bureaus of representation in Hollywood, Chicago, London, Paris, Berlin and Sydney. And linked, too, with Motion Picture Daily,

Figuring Ahead

One of the sponsors of an Illinois state censorship bill presented at Springfield is said to have other interests in its passage than the safeguarding of public morality. The story is that he is a silent partner in an independent Chicago film business, and is laboring under the impression that if exhibition permits were issued by the Illinois department of education they would be harder for the major producers to obtain. The result, he is said to believe, would be that his independent product would have a greater chance for major theatre bookings that are now denied him.

More Exchanges For P. D. C. Unit In Europe Keys

By W. H. MOORING, London

T. S. Delehanty, RKO Pathe chief, in London to look over the P. D. C. organization in Europe, is preparing to visit the Continent where he will open exchanges. He says he is not, however, sufficiently impressed by the prospects in the European market to open his own company's offices there. Distribution arrangements are to be developed as far as possible through agencies.

Delehanty declares that the P. D. C. unit in England will continue to operate entirely separately from the Radio organization, and although the two are under the same parental control, they will remain distinct entities. Meantime Radio and P. D. C. are both using the new RKO theatre on Leicester Square jointly as a show house. Following "Cimarron," "Beau Ideal," "Born to Love" and "Lonely Wives," supplemented by Reginald Smith's British productions, "Never Trouble Trouble" and "Other People's Sins," elaborate stage shows are contemplated under direction of Basil Dean.

Keeping Wardour St. Out of the Red

No secret in the news that several executives in London's Wardour Street are getting "stiff" letters from New York. And this fact is feeding the gossips who like to look forward to trouble. Following Arthur Clavering's sudden departure from the managing directorship of Warners British, and his succession by H. Bandy, former general sales manager, stories are going the rounds that other well known executives are marked for similar experience.

D. E. Griffiths, general manager of First National-Pathe, London, has been appointed to the Warner board and will be Bandy's right-hand man.

HAMMONS TO GO ON WITH ALLIED FRANCHISE

Educational Assumes the Contract Frowned on by Jensen in Recent Negotiations

Speculation over the future of the Tiffany franchise with Allied States Association, is understood to have been cleared away at least insofar as Educational is concerned, with decision of E. W. Hammons and other Educational-Tiffany chiefs, to live up to the agreement, which was closed last year by Oscar Hanson, for Tiffany, with Abram F. Myers and Al Steffes, of Allied. Speculation over the future of the franchise has been rife since Hammons, Educational chief, concluded a deal two months ago with L. A. Young to take over Tiffany under a plan of unified operation.

E. W. Hammons

The Tiffany franchise with Allied theatre members is understood to have been the cause of considerable bickering on the part of Emil Jensen, of Inspiration Pictures, and others when they were negotiating with L. A. Young two months ago for acquisition of Tiffany. None of these deals reached more than the half-way negotiation stage, and the franchise is said to have been one reason why they were not consummated. Jensen, and others, are said to have refused flatly to take over the Allied tie-up with other Tiffany assets and liabilities.

Abram F. Myers

The franchise deal, basically, gives to Allied theatre affiliates 26 feature pictures each season, for which a rental is charged on the basis of a pre-determined exhibition value. The value is arrived at by Allied and Tiffany officials and is not permitted to reach a higher average than $750,000 for the year. The exhibitor is assessed a certain number of points according to the size of his theatre, being charged $3 per point.

Al Steffes

Since Hammons acquired operating control of Tiffany, he has not attempted to confer with Allied chiefs pertaining to the future of the contract, and as a result insiders have been given cause for speculation, no little of which is understood to have crept into Allied ranks.

Those on the inside of Allied are aware of a friendly attitude on the organization's part toward Educational, principally because the company is one of the few remaining independents having no theatre or circuit affiliations. On numerous occasions, Allied has fought major distributors on sales contracts which would force exhibitors to book shorts of major companies when they booked features. This fight, waged vigrously by Allied over a long period, automatically defended Educational's short subject sales by preventing major companies from "bottling up" the short subject market with their own product.

Although no official mention has been made of the new season's Tiffany line-up, 26 features are understood to have been decided upon, including four from Cruze, eight each from Maynard and Steele, Western stars, and six others. These will be announced at the combined Educational-Tiffany-World Wide sales convention which takes place sometime in July. A date has not as yet been set, nor has there been definite decision to hold a national or regional confab. The latter at present finds favor in Educational's home office, principally because of its lower expense.

If Hammons does not deliver 26 Tiffany features next year, in line with the Allied franchise requirements, the situation may acquire another complexion. Whether or not Allied will take this as an excuse to "balk" is held to be unlikely. But Allied leaders will, it is said, explain the legal and contractual interpretation to its members and instruct them to use their own judgment.

E. W. Hammons has announced that 58 features will be released by Educational-Sono Art-World Wide-Tiffany, in 1931-32.

There will be 18 Trem Carr Westerns, comprising eight with Maynard and 8 featuring Bob Steele. Tiffany will offer 20, and Sono Art-World Wide 10 so far, with probably another 10 to follow.

Sydney Wage Scale Reduced 10 Per Cent

Wages of amusement employees and musicians in Sydney, Australia, covered by federal awards, have been reduced 10 per cent by the federal arbitration court, bringing projectionists' pay down to $30 for a 38-hour working week.

While the cut was expected, employees have already started a campaign to bring about a reversion to former schedule. Failing that they will agitate for a lower admission scale, believing that such a reduction will attract greater patronage, and that more jobs will be created as a direct consequence. Statistics presented to the court showed that 80 per cent of amusement employees in Sydney are working for from $2 to $8 a week.

34 Distributors in Germany

With majority having Berlin headquarters, the list of German distributors now totals 34. This includes domestic renters and American and other foreign companies.

"C. B." the Still Collector

When Cecil B. de Mille moves his office from the M-G-M studios on June 1st, in preparation for a trip abroad, there will pass to other quarters perhaps the most complete collection of production still pictures in existence.

De Mille has kept the full set of stills from every one of his 57 features. No other single director, it is said, has kept such a complete record of his work.

Public Service Experiment is 'News' Reel Plan

Viewing the coming of the Chicago Daily News into the field of national newsreel production as a move of especial interest beyond the usual newspaper participation in motion picture enterprises, MOTION PICTURE HERALD sought an expression from the News concerning its participation with Universal in the new newsreel enterprise announced last week. THE HERALD has received the following statement from James N. Shyrock, secretary and business manager of the Chicago Daily News.

"I admit that it might seem somewhat of a venture, if not an adventure, for a newspaper to undertake to enter the newsreel production field. The Chicago Daily News has affiliated with Universal Pictures in such an enterprise, however, with a great deal of confidence.

"The Chicago Daily News has for five years maintained its own newsreel department for the collection and distribution of newsreels in the Chicago territory, so it is not unacquainted with the problems involved. Through the Associated Press, United Press and its own world-wide news gathering organization, it is constantly in touch with the important and picturesque events in the news. These facilities will be at the command of the newsreel enterprise.

"And the Daily News has had two years of very satisfactory relation with Universal Pictures in the distribution of a joint newsreel in the Chicago territory.

"We do not expect a direct appraisable institutional return from this enterprise. We consider our newsreel activities in the same class as radio, television, personal service and allied activities in which the Chicago Daily News has been a pioneer . . . experiments in public service which a newspaper must undertake because it is best equipped to do so.

"We are devoting to this undertaking the facilities of our men and offices here and abroad in the belief that the association, if successful, will be of benefit both to the newsreel and newspaper."

It is announced by Universal that Sam Jacobson, who has been identified with all Universal's newsreel enterprises for some years, will continue as editor of the new project.

EXCHANGE QUIZ LOWERS FILM ISSUES

Liquidation and a Lack of Demand Also Contribute to Steady and Heavy Selling

By THE ANALYIST

With the New York Stock Exchange sending questionnaires to members in a checkup on short-selling operations, picture stocks were subjected, with the rest of the market, to another selling wave that carried Paramount, RKO, Eastman, Loew's and others to record lows during the week.

Startling revelations concerning bear raids against amusement stocks were reported to be impending as a result of the probe and there were whispers of "sharp practices," "dissemination of false rumors," etc., but in view of the market's continued reaction following announcement of the stock exchange action, indications were that some of the persistent reaction experienced not only in film issues, but in all sections of the list, including seasoned "blue chips," could be attributed to liquidation and lack of important demand.

At any rate, the stock exchange action did not immediately "spike the guns" of the bear crowd, which turned its heavy artillery on Eastman Kodak and Paramount, forcing both down to new lows. Kodak sold down to 126½, where it was off more than 13 points on the week and more than 59 points below its high for the year. As the company issues only annual earnings reports and showed a lower net for 1930 than for 1929 it was evident that the company's earnings for 1931 were being subject to considerable downward revision in the minds of the speculative fraternity.

Paramount sold down to levels where it was reported to be nearing the point at which a reported group is desirous of snapping up large blocks of the shares. Its low this week represented a decline of more than 29 points from the year's high and was a loss of more than 5 points for the week. The inter-booking agreement with Warners came into the news again this week, being reported all ready for signature, a step that would enhance earnings prospects of both organizations to a high degree.

Retirement of Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Hayden, Stone & Co. from the affairs of Warner Brothers apparently was a constructive step if action of the company's stock can be used as a criterion, Warner shares showing up as one of the steady features of the week. The stock held closely around 5 throughout the period.

The earnings report for the company's second quarter (which appears in detail elsewhere in this issue) had already been more or less discounted by the stock's recent deflation and some encouragement was derived from the fact that picture and theatre operations showed a net profit, although the company was placed "in the red" by its radio subsidiaries. Reports that Warners were in need of immediate additional cash were discounted in financial circles, where it was reported the company has sufficient funds to pay off, if necessary, bank loans of $2,500,000.

Warner convertible 6 per cent debentures reflected steadiness in the common stock by a steady upswing from their recent low.

Fox was subject to a large turnover during the week, but moved within a comparatively narrow range and held above the low touched in the previous week. Some selling of the stock in anticipation of the earnings report was in evidence.

Loew's displayed less resistance to reactionary tendencies than recently and sold off to a new low for the year, while comparatively narrow price movements took place in others of the picture group.

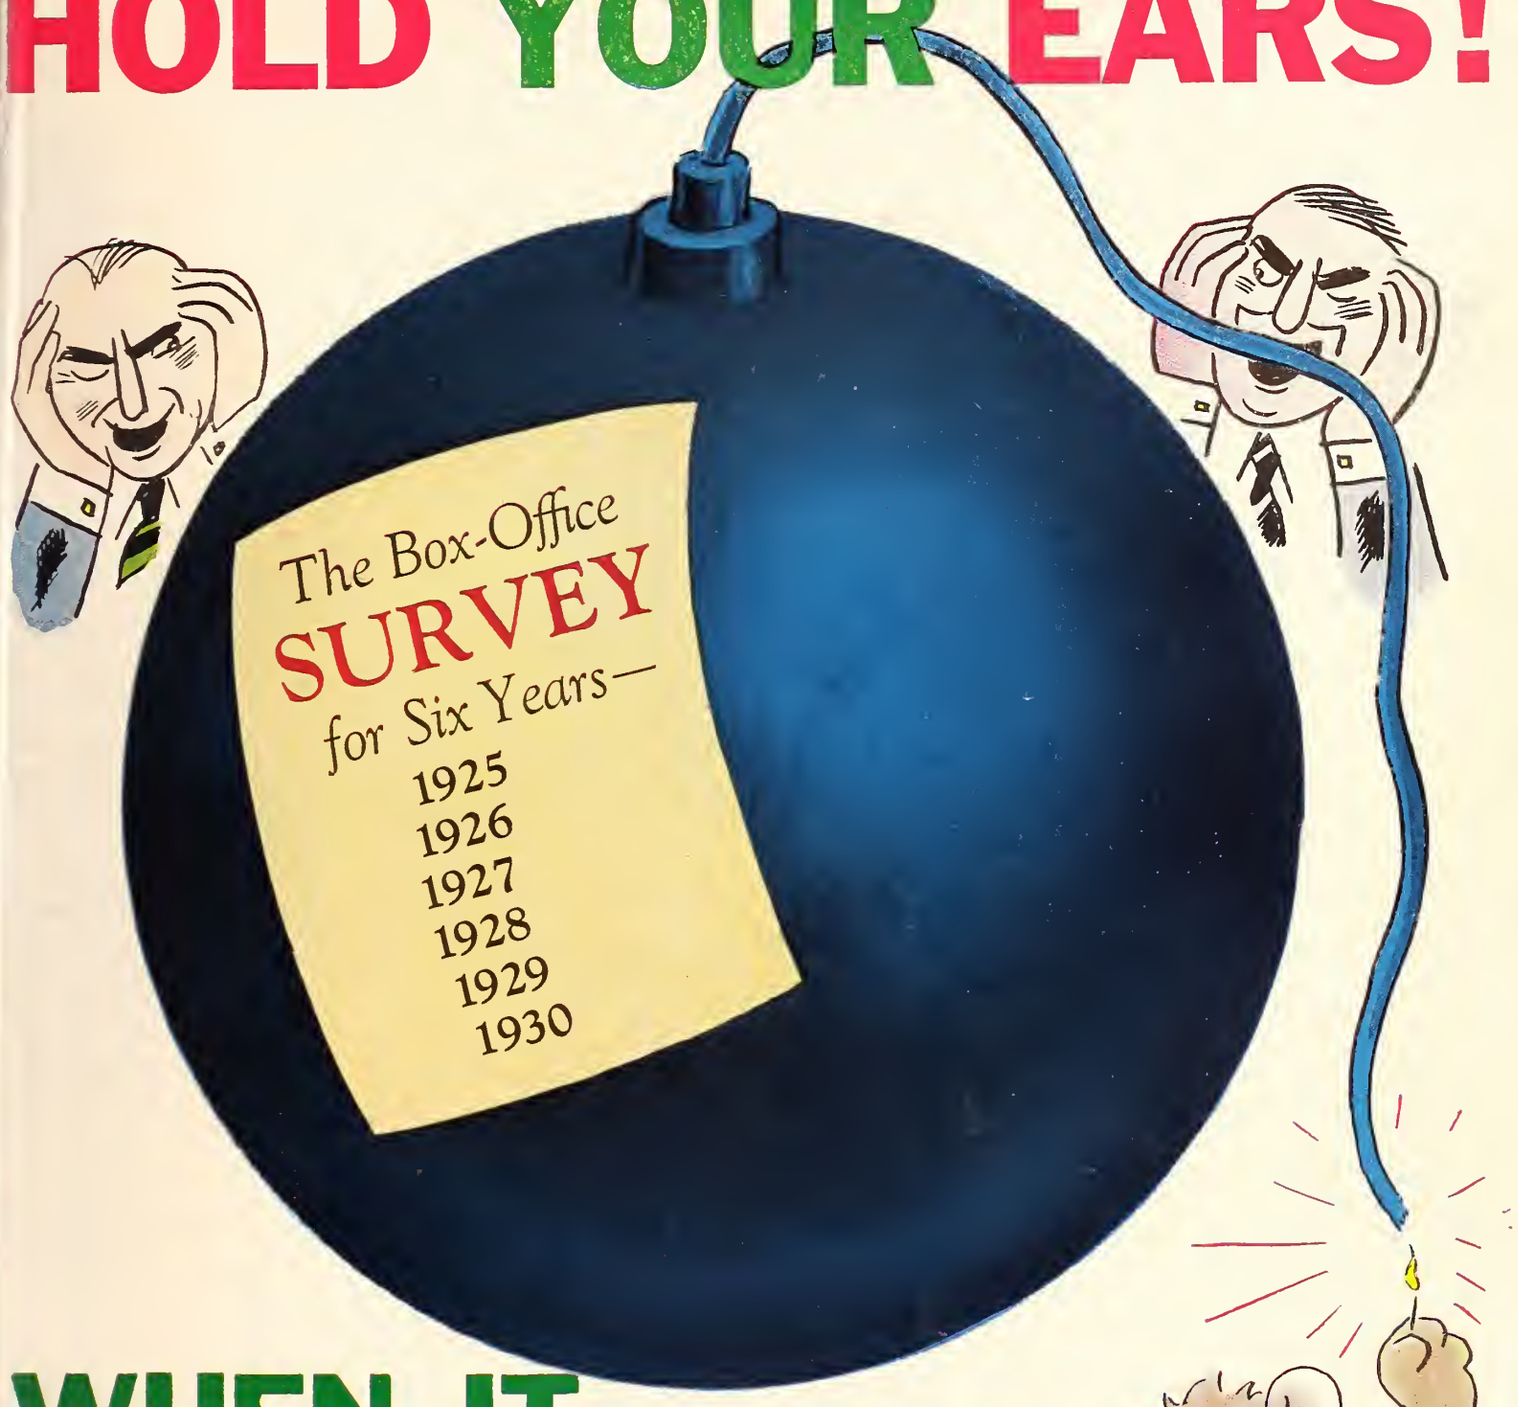
Paramount Cancels $750,000 Additional 20-Year Gold Bonds

Paramount Publix Corporation on Wednesday delivered to Chase National Bank, New York, as trustee, $750,000 par value of its 20 year 5½ per cent sinking fund gold bonds dated August 1, 1930 for cancellation in compliance with the indenture under which these bonds were issued and which provides for retirement of $750,000 par value of these bonds on August 1st of each year under a sinking fund provision.



The bonds were purchased in the open-market and are being cancelled now instead of on August 1, 1931, leaving outstanding $14,250,000 par value of this issue which was originally $15,000,000.

MELODRAMA RUNS A CLOSE SECOND IN POPULARITY

Action pictures, as shown in the box office chart published in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, lead in point of popularity with audiences of the United States and Canada, this having been determined through a study of grosses in 30 cities during the first four months of this year. Melodrama was a close second, this type of attraction and action films being the only two classifications to win first position in a break down of the survey into four sections as charted above. However, action pictures maintained the highest average throughout. Action found particular favor in Central and Western United States, as is indicated on the accompanying graph, while melodrama drew its highest grosses in Eastern United States and in Canada. Sex pictures held second place in Central and Western United States and in Canada, but dropped to third position in the Eastern section of the United States.

Radical Ohio Censor Not To Be Renamed, Is Belief

Ohio has finally decided that it can get along without the zealous services of John L. Clifton as censor head. Clifton has been the object of severe criticism on numerous occasions, and following his ban of "The Big House," his action was denounced in many newspaper editorials.

Clifton functions as chief censor as head of the state department of education. It is understood that he will not be reappointed to this position when his term expires June 10. Reports say that Governor White has offered the post to Frank J. Prout, Sandusky school superintendent, and that he has declined.

New Management Strengthening Local Position by Disposition of Runs In N. Y. Area to Independents

Fox Theatres this week continued its wholesale divestment of theatre properties in the city area. In recent weeks, the Eastern division has disposed of 50 houses in Northern New Jersey, Brooklyn, Manhattan and Long Island, and in the majority of deals the theatres were re-sold to their original independent operators.

The Fox home office on Thursday concluded a deal with Frisch and Rinzler, which gives to that independent circuit a string of 11 Fox theatres in Brooklyn, including the Marlboro, Benson, Senate, Walker, Carlton, Terminal, Atlantic, Riviera, Stratford, Ambassador and Biltmore. This combination purchased four others from Fox a few months ago, the new deal giving it 15 houses in local territory and placing it second to A. H. Schwartz in size of independent New York operators.

Schwartz, who controls 26 theatres in Brooklyn and Long Island, through his Century Circuit, is now dickering for 20 Fox theatres in his Brooklyn-Long Island stronghold. If the deal is consummated, Fox will not have a single theatre on the Island.

The Frisch and Rinzler deal becomes effective on Sunday, following the last show, when several Fox managers, originally with F. & R., will return to that independent unit to continue in charge of their respective houses. A shakeup in Fox Eastern theatre personnel will immediately follow, particularly among managers and assistants.

In the turn-back of Fox Metropolitan houses to their former independent owners, Fox is not receiving financial remuneration for the good-will of the various theatres, which it originally paid for, but instead, is reeciving from each independent, a five-year contract to book company product in those

A Forget Party!

Warner Brothers club in Cleveland held a hard time party. As it happened, everyone came in costume. It is not definitely stated, but it seems very likely that all the folks wore costumes as an excuse to wear masks, so that the next door neighbor could not tell it was his "across the hedge" friend who was feeling the blight. They chewed on "hot dogs" and danced the blues away.

$2,289,263 NET FOR B. & K. IN '30; HOLDINGS NOW WORTH $19,165,810

Assets Increase Nearly 4 Millions in Two Years

Surplus Jumps One Million, with Cut of $500,000 in Notes and Theatre Mortgages

Publix-Balaban & Katz Corp., Chicago, reported net profit of $2,289,263, after deduction of interest charges, depreciation, amortization and Federal income tax during 1930. The earnings are equivalent to $7 per share on the 28,513 shares of preferred stock outstanding, and $3 per share on 264,206 shares of common outstanding.

Sam Katz, President of B. & K. and Publix Theatre Chief

The company's report for 1929 showed net profit of $2,750,241, equivalent to $9.50 on the preferred and $4.25 on the common. Net in 1928 totaled $1,860,796. The 1930 net, therefore, while $460,978 lower than in 1929, is $428,467 higher than in 1928.

The Publix-owned circuit's properties at the end of 1930 were valued at $19,165,810, as compared with $18,458,147 in 1929 and $16,929,402 at the close of 1928. The increase in two years represents $2,236,408, which indicates the extent to which B. & K. has expanded its strategically located holdings in the Chicago territory, where the circuit dominates the exhibition field.

Good-will listed on the books of the company has fluctuated but little from the $690,127 figure made public in 1928.

Total assets are $3,734,817 more than at the end of 1928. On December 27, 1930, assets reached $24,769,101, compared with $23,836,697 in 1929, and $21,034,284 in 1928.

Preferred and capital stock is listed at $9,456,450 on the 1930, 1929 and 1928 balance sheets, with dividends of $199,591 on preferred, and $792,618 on common having been paid during each year.

Notes and mortages on B. & K. theatre properties were reduced $500,000 in 1930, at the close of which the company had outstanding a total of $5,592,633, compared with $6,103,167 in 1929 and $4,794,376 in 1928.

Increase of more than $1,000,000 in surplus during 1930 is further indication of the stronger position now held by the circuit. An $8,201,201 surplus was listed on the 1930 balance sheet, as compared with $6,904,147 in 1929, and $5,161,115 in 1928.

Some one in RKO made a deal with Telechron clock, the terms of which would give to Radio pictures an elaborate tie-up in store windows of all dealers handling the electric timepieces. . . . In return for which RKO would include shots of Telechron clocks in conspicuous spots of Radio pictures, wherever possible. . . . The clock people, it is said, had printed a mountainous assortment of literature telling details of the deal to dealers and distributors. . . .

What happened from this point on is a mystery. . . . But RKO will not include shots of Telechron clocks in conspicuous spots on Radio pictures.

The executive of a major circuit paid a visit, incognito, to a New York run, and with a dozen other patrons, was permitted to enter the house without being told that seats would not be available for quite some time. . . . Which, in exhibitor parlance, is a "boner." . . . The entire group protested and demanded a refund, which brought the assistant manager to the scene. . . . And his lordship (the assistant manager) regaled the little crowd, in a loud tone, that it was all a mistake, but "the manager was a new man and didn't know his business," etc., etc., and that if he, the assistant, were put in charge, things would be different. . . . We assume the young genius was immediately placed in charge of an "apple sellers" squad.

'S a Fact

The regular weekly letter of a Yonkers, N. Y., circuit manager to his home office chief the other day contained the following: . . .

"Management was caused considerable embarrassment when, in an unusually tense moment during the feature showing, a chap rose to his feet and hollered lustily: 'Is there a doctor in the house?'

"A patron seated down front jumped to his feet and replied: 'Why, yes, I'm a doctor!'

"To which the inebriated chap so kindly shouted: 'Well, how ya, doc! How they comin'!"

THOSE recent salary slashes by major companies are the topics of more than ordinary discussion wherever picture folk congregate. . . . And during one such discourse this week, an executive, who is plenty important in this industry's scheme of things, advanced a plan which immediately registered with his listeners as being of more than average intelligence. . . .

"One company," he stated, "plans to save approximately $3,000,000 yearly on reduced salaries. . . . Two millions should be appropriated immediately for the biggest ballyhoo and exploitation-advertising campaign which this company, or any other in the industry, has ever witnesses. . . .

"Sell the staff, in the field and home office; sell the theatre owner, and sell the public as they have never been sold before. . . . Accept this money so saved from salary envelopes as a loan for use in a worth-while investment, and bolster up the staff's morale by telling 'em so, rather than have them continue in the spirit of a pessimism, down-hearted and half-beaten. . . .

"Tell 'em—and live up to the promise—that if the campaign clicks and returns money on the investment, as it most certainly should, each employee will receive at least part of the amount lost by him through the lowered scale. . . . And let him know, too, that if it doesn't go over with a bang, the cut stands. . . .

"One immediate result would be to turn the entire outfit into a unit of workin' and fightin' men who are out to beat to a frazzle that widely discussed economic 'storm.'"

Kent Gives Waite Supervision Over Paramount Shorts

Stanley Waite has been appointed sales manager of short features and newsreels for Paramount Publix. Waite was formerly western divisional sales representative for shorts.

"Because of increasing importance of news and short feature department and its relation to film rental income we have decided to concentrate sales activities of the department under one head for both Eastern and Western divisions," explained Sidney R. Kent, sales chief.

Waite will work in association with George Schaefer, eastern divisional sales manager, and John Clark, western divisional sales manager.

Miles Gibbons, former short subject sales representative for the East, has been transferred to Emanuel Cohen's newsreel department and will function with him in production.

U. S. Feared Set To Levy 10% Tax

A legislative danger facing the industry, of which only a few New York executives are aware, lies in the Washington discussion of a possible return of the 10 per cent tax on theatre admissions, as a means of cutting into the probable $1,000,000,000 deficit facing the treasury department this year.

The industry has not yet finished with the worst legislative attack which has ever confronted it, and it is with decided fear that executives are watching the new tax movement at the national capital.

The tax on the approximate $1,000,000,000 yearly theatre receipts would mean a levy of $100,000,000 per year, to be borne partly by the public and partly by the industry. It appears possible that very shortly industry leaders will be requested to submit to congressional committees a report on the status of the business, considering the weak economic condition and tax burden now confronting the industry.

Indianapolis Phototone Places Two Equipments on Market

Phototone Corp., Indianapolis, has placed on the market a complete all A. C. operated sound-on-film unit, Talkafilm, which can be attached to Powers, Simplex and Kaplan projectors.

The unit comes complete with amplifier, speakers, rectifier and tubes. The amplifier is said to be capable of producing enough volume to take care of theatres seating 2,000. The unit is to be used with 110-120 volts alternating current, 50 to 60 cycles.

Phototone also has placed on the market sound-on-film sound heads which come complete with drives, photo cells, lense system and exciter lamps.

Not So Hot!

In a small Ohio town, near Cincinnati, is an exhibitor, who, one night recently, was plenty hot and bothered. In the first place, he was hot because of the weather, and bothered, because business was anything but hot. In fact, it was freezing.

Mr. Exhibitor was his own cashier, this night, and for reason number one, he removed his shirt. For reason number two, he achieved an idea—A sign above the ticket window, some few minutes later, in large type, read: "Your patronage earnestly solicited. I lost my shirt on this picture." History, however, fails to record that he was trampled in the rush of patrons to see the shirt-losing film!

Chicago Inquiry Seeks Reason for Probable Closing

The Cook County, Chicago, grand jury subpoenaed 68 independent exhibitors last Wednesday and Thursday to answer questions concerning the mechanical necessity for two men in a projection booth, proportionate projectionist cost in overhead and wage scale in comparison with larger theatres in Chicago and other cities.

The action followed the independents' announcement that 100 houses would close there for the summer on June 1 unless wage adjustments were made. No affiliated exhibitors were summoned to appear.

Independent leaders flatly denied they asked the investigation, claiming it a complete surprise to them. The inquiry was conducted by assistant state's attorney James Lounsbury, who said it was for the purpose of determining whether unfair practices exist which would force so many closings. If so, steps will be taken to remedy the situation, according to Lounsbury.

Van Hyning Again Kan.-Mo. President

The Motion Picture Theatres Association of Kansas and Western Missouri closed its two-day convention in St. Joseph, Mo. Wednesday. E. Van Hyning was re-elected president. John Stapels of Rockport, Mo., was elected vice-president.

The association voted in favor of the new standard exhibition contract and for the uniform zoning plan, which has not been in use since December. The association also decided to form an organization of business men throughout Kansas for the purpose of killing the present blue laws.

Schine Declares Dividend

A regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents on preferred stock has been declared by Schine Chain Theatres, payable on June 1, to stockholders of record May 20.

New Momand Suit Claims Violation of State Trust Laws

A state anti-trust suit filed in superior court at Shawnee, Okla., by Clarence Tankersley, county attorney of Pottawatomie county, charges violation of the Oklahoma anti-trust laws by six distributing and theatre concerns. The suit was filed at the request of B. Momand, operator of the Momand theatre, who named 24 theatre firms in a federal anti-trust suit last month.

The Tankersley suit names L. C. Griffith, Griffith Amusement Company; R. E. Heffner, branch manager of Paramount, Oklahoma City; John B. Terry, operator of the Terry theatres; Universal exchange, Paramount Publix and Regal theatres. In the event the suit is upheld, property of defendants would be sold and proceeds turned to the state.

United Artists Is Set With 11 Titles

United Artists for 1931-32 will have a minimum of 14 features, of which 11 are already definitely set. Latest information indicates the absence of Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks from the star list, though it is entirely possible they will later appear on the schedule. Gloria Swanson is slated for two films.

The titles up to the present include: "Unholy Garden," with Ronald Colman, Fay Wray; "Palmy Days," with Eddie Cantor; "Groundhogs," with Spencer Tracy, Renee Marvelle; Howard Hughes to produce; "Corsair," with Chester Morris; "Queer People," with Jean Harlow; "Street Scene," with Estelle Taylor, Nancy Carroll, Buster Collier; "Rockabye" or "Love Goes Past," and "Tonight or Never," with Gloria Swanson; "The Greeks Had a Name for Them," with Ina Claire, Carole Lombard, Jean Harlow; "Arrowsmith," with Ronald Colman.

Union Leader Asks Labor in Films to Refund Part of Play

Rebating by operators and stage hands working for major circuits of a part of their wages for 10 weeks this summer has been urged by headquarters of the unions involved and the unions are voting on the proposal.

This action was recommended by William Canavan, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators.

It has been reported generally that the industry has been forced to meet unusual expenses incidental to the advent of sound pictures and the growing popularity of vaudeville, and attendance at motion picture theatres is reduced in summer.

Sarnoff Back in New York

David Sarnoff has returned to New York after a visit to the Radio Coast studio. Hiram S. Brown accompanied him.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

"Previous Week" saw slightly better business than Current Week," although the change in total grosses the two periods was approximately only .05%. imatic conditions had much to do with this very slight op for "Current Week."

Lower grosses were more or less general throughout the country. New low grosses were established in 13 situations, although this figure is not out of the ordinary, for each week brings its quota of record lows for the year.

NEW YORK'S GREATEST CR

William Boehnel, World-Telegram

"Dix has topped his work in 'Cimarron.' Has all the ingredients a popular film should have—laughter, tears, and thrills. Excellently played and directed. It's worth seeing."

Regina Crewe, N. Y. American

"Richard Dix does it again! . . . offers a gripping characterization which equals his best efforts. Ideal combination of thrills, tears and laughter . . . about the acme of popular motion picture entertainment. Highly hilarious sequences fill the Mayfair with long, loud laughter . . . furtive kerchiefs dab at tears that just won't stop flowing. Our congratulations to Radio Pictures on 'Young Donovan's Kid.' It's a winner."

Irene Thirer, Daily News

"Here's one to make you laugh and cry. It's a tear-jerker . . . all of its sentimentality rings true. Loads of action and a big kerchief full of tears. You'll go strong for 'Young Donovan's Kid' if you're human—and who isn't?"

Don Hancock, Film Daily

"Jackie Cooper gives remarkable performance in tear-producing drama. Great audience appeal. Tear-jerker par excellence . . . sure-fire audience getter."

"Gangster vehicle for Richard Dix worthy of 'Cimarron'. Dix and Jackie Cooper give outstanding performances... had every audience sobbing yesterday. Dix is grand. Packs an appeal that should make it a smash hit in the program variety. Best attraction the Mayfair has had in many weeks."

Iotion Picture Daily

"Highly dramatic and entertaining talker. Human interest story which packs a wallop throughout."

are Lorentz, Evening Journal

"Great performance given by Jackie Cooper ... a youngster who will tear your heart out ... a child actor with enough appeal to melt the heart of an undertaker's assistant. He's great. That lad could perform 'Macbeth' and I'd like it."

Iarguerite Tazelaar, Herald Tribune

"Strong human interest film ... directed with admirable speed. Dix a melodramatic performer of the first water ... Jackie Cooper a moving and convincing actor."

LEAKS HALTING SOUND PERFECTION: CRABTREE

SMPE Five-Day Los Angeles Meet Highlights Laboratory, Color Practices and Development

Society of M. P. Engineers, in semi-annual convention at Los Angeles, on Thursday neared the end of its five-day meet with an all-day symposium of laboratory practices, discussing ways and means of economically and technically improving equipment used in this field.

Following the session, producers played host to 200 delegates at Beverly Hills, which was the social follow-up to the banquet held on Wednesday night at the Roosevelt Hotel, where President J. Crabtree told 300 in attendance that improvement in sound, particularly music, is imperative. Speech is okay, stated Crabtree, but music quality needs improvement, he said.

Franklin Paper Read

Earlier in the week, delegates witnessed a demonstration picture which revealed pictures of sound waves and air currents made at a speed of 40,000 pictures per second. A representative of Harold B. Franklin read Franklin's paper on color, in which was pointed out the extent which color has suffered because of inexperience of producers and their technicians in handling its development. The color session was one of the most important of the meet, with six other engineers and color technicians discussing practically all phases of color.

Previous to an inspection trip to Fox studios on Tuesday, the engineers devoted several hours to a symposium on sound recording.

Nate Golden, of the Department of Commerce, M. P Bureau, explained America's film export and import relations with foreign countries. Ben Schlanger, New York architect, revealed his method of a reversed slope in theatre construction.

Burton Fitts, Los Angeles district attorney, opened the meet on Monday at the American Legion Hall. He was followed by Clinton Wunder, the Academy's executive manager, and Commander Stephen Hall, of the Hollywood Post of the American Legion.

Must Extend Volume

Crabtree told the engineers that there are serious leakages now existing in the transfer of sound from the recorder to the laboratory, and from there to the projector and loudspeaker and these must be reduced for perfect reproduction. Engineers, he said, must extend the frequency and volume range of reproduced sound and must reduce ground noises and add sound perspective. Increasing apparatus will be necessary, he said, as will continued research.

Ira Hoke, in his address at the banquet, stated that "Time is wasted focussing cameras with poor range finders. This practice is costing thousands and could be eliminated if better finders are developed," he stated.

Joseph I. Schnitzer, RKO production chief; Sol Wurtzel, Fox studio; Lee DeForest, Sid Grauman, Frank Woods, Clinton Wunder, Ira Hoke, Sam Hardy, L. W. Physioc, Friend Baker, and Hollywood's leading studio engineers, were at the dais at the banquet.

The initial session, opened by Crabtree with his semi-annual report, revolved around miscellaneous technical and economic discussions. This was followed by a heavily concentrated color symposium. On Tuesday, sound recording and laboratory practices were highlighted, following which the convention turned attention to studio and additional laboratory developments.

Wisconsin Owners Urged to Defeat Projection Bill

Fred S. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin has addressed an urgent communication to all members of that organization, requesting their cooperation in defeating the state Senate bill which provides for a projectionist at every machine in all houses in the state.

The bill, once defeated in the lower house, provides penalties including revocation of license after the second offense. Meyer says in part: "I have said before, and I repeat now, this bill is more dangerous by far than the tax proposal or any other adverse legislation aimed against our interests this year. To make myself perfectly clear, if this bill goes through, what is going to stop the legislators from enacting a law compelling you to have one man on your stage at all times, regardless of whether you need him or not?"

Protest Showing Chinese Only as Plotters of Crime

The Chinese government is preparing to file an official protest through its London representatives, against motion pictures which show the Chinese people in an unfavorable light. Pictures specifically referred to by Kuangson Young, Chinese consul-general in London, are "Dr. Fu Manchu" and "The Yellow Mask." The protests, which are the result of pressure brought by Chinese residents of England, will be filed with film trade organizations, and possibly also with the government.

It is objected that a vogue of mystery plays has resulted in the repeated showing of Chinese people only as authors of black magic and plotters of crime.

Catholic Group to Discuss Social Aspects of Screen

Social aspects of the screen, particularly its relationship with the church, will be discussed at a conference of representatives of the Roman Catholic church to be held in Ottawa, Ont., June 29.

Among speakers will be two from the United States, Rev. M. L. Fortier, dean of sociology at Fordham University, New York; and Joseph I. Breen of Chicago.

Copyright Protection Bureau Appropriation Is $125,000

Copyright Protection Bureau has appropriated $125,000 for the year to fight bicycling and print holdovers.

Distributors sponsor the bureau, organized to investigate and prosecute copyright violators.

What Price Snake Necks!

There is a real poser confronting someone or other, and a railway company in particular, down Brownsville, Texas, way. The question is: How much is a snake's neck worth in American money? It seems that "Snake" King ordered a couple of pythons from Chicago. He trains 'em. One of them escaped, was recaptured, and arrived in Brownsville with a broken neck. King wants $250, and says he would ask more, except that $250 is the maximum possible damages on snakes' necks. He believes someone opened the box in which the pythons were traveling and left the front door open when he left, without even bothering to say "hello" or "goodbye!"

Major Companies Watch Progress Of Foreign Films

Distributors are watching closely the more or less experimental development of Protex Trading Corp., owned by Leo Brecher, New York, for distribution of foreign productions in this country.

According to Norman S. Arenwald, general manager of Protex, bookings in the four months the company has been in operation, have exceeded expectations, and it is planned to have at least 15 foreign pictures ready for national release at the beginning of October.

Success of foreign distribution in this country, according to Arenwald, depends entirely on the proper buying of films abroad.

Recent Protex bookings include large houses in Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Baltimore, Jersey City, Newark, Los Angeles, Chicago, Boston and other spots.

German producers, he said, have recently developed an exaggerated idea of the possible gross in this country, principally because of the phenomenal success in New York of "Two Hearts in Waltz Time," but they, being anxious to reach the American market, have cooled their desire for high prices when they realized they would have to take less, or nothing.

The duty on feature imports to this country is small, only two cents per foot. There are not more than 25 out of 300 German-made films which ever reach this country, in the opinion of Arenwald. It is his belief that no circuit of any great size showing foreign-made films can survive in this country, since besides the cost of developing a circuit, there is involved the large expense in stills, prints and the like, in merely preparing the films for widespread distribution over a national circuit. The market, he thinks, can not meet this advance cost.

At least one large theatre company here, Loew's, has been experimenting with German films, at special Saturday midnight performances in houses located in German districts, apparently with considerable success.
